Earth Getting Flat
Mathematical Biology
Safety First
Why a $10,000,000 Court?

—By Arthur Brisbane—

THE TOP OF PIKE'S PEAK, until recently 14,109 feet above the ocean is four inches lower now. Melting of the ice cap and erosion make the difference.

Slowly all mountain peaks are coming down through the action on the rock of frost, rain, snow, wind. In time the earth will become absolutely round, and it may be necessary here, as it is supposed to be now on the planet Ma, to dig canals big enough to hold the waters of our oceans. If the earth were perfectly round the water would be one mile deep everywhere.

But don't worry about your real estate, that flatness is millions of years off.

If the depression has not made you entirely dizzy, you may complete the process by studying the "mathematical side of biology," latest thing in science. The new science of "mathematical biology or evolutionary mechanics" is fascinating, if you can understand it.

Genes, which are "units of heredity in the chromosomes and determine life's evolution," march forward along mathematical lines. You will be surprised to learn that scientists, at will, are breeding flies of all sorts, including a fly that is female on one side and male on the other.

More than 500 years before Christ, Pythagoras, a Greek philosopher of Samos, made mathematics the principle of all existing things. Turn for relief to Pythagoras if you find modern mathematical biology too deep.

The National Safety Council supplies information on accidents, and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. scatters the facts.

South Carolina is the safest State in the Union as regards accidents. Automobile accidents, of which a majority could have been prevented by thought and common sense, rank first in causing death.

For every victim of an airplane tragedy, there are 50 victims of automobiles.

However, it should be remembered that there are 30 million automobiles running around, with the risk of bumping into each other, and comparatively few airplanes flying. When the airplane is fully developed, using a road 20,000 miles wide, with no grade crossings, it will be the safest of all conveyances. Even now, any one of the airmail pilots flying over the Rockies and landing at the edge of the Pacific will tell you that what really makes him nervous is the drive from the air field to his home by automobile.

President Hoover, helping to lay the corner stone of a new $10,000,000 Supreme Court building in Washington, told representatives of the Bar Association that he counted on them to improve conditions in the country.

One way to improve conditions would be to stop squandering money needlessly, for instance, on a new, unnecessary ten-million-dollar Supreme Court house.

The people already had the best possible Supreme Court room, with plenty of space for the judges, below the Capitol Dome. Perhaps President Hoover had would have mentioned that, if he had said all he thought.

If you are interested in puns, or "plays on words," sometimes described as "the lowest form of wit," you will enjoy a communication from the distinguished American writer, Bruno Lessing. Writing from St. Cloud, France, and referring to a letter printed in this column from W. R. Hearst concerning Mr. Edge, American ambassador in Paris, Bruno Lessing writes, exhausting his ingenuity in the use of the ambassador's name:

"Had a great kick out of telegram from W. R. wherein he went on the ramp-edge against American ambassadors. They really are a great disadvant-edge to American interests. Our Parisian specimen has little knowl-edge. I'm sure he never went to coll-edge. I don't want to dispar-edge him, but I'm sure that someone in his dot-edge picked him out of a rumm-edge bag.

"Unfortunately we have no diplomatic peer-edge. We are living in the machine-edge and we select most of our ambassadors from our political sewer-edge. I have met quite a number of them and I think they all belong to the order of from-edge de brie.

"There is quite a short-edge of American patriotism over here. It is more advant-edge-ous to chime in with the European view."

MacDonald, of England, and Herriot, of France, met yesterday to discuss disarmament. The United States delegate, Norman H. Davis, could not go. He was in bed with a heavy cold.

It is sad that he has a cold, but you are glad that there was nobody from the United States

JUROR BARES PLOT TO "FIX" GUN TRIAL

As Anthony De Perna went on trial today in Superior Court on a charge of carrying a loaded revolver, Joseph Garber, Hillside st., Roxbury, one of the jurors, stood up and told Judge Broadhurst he felt he should not sit on the case. Garber said he had been approached last Sunday. The rest of the story he told Judge Broadhurst in whispers and an investigation will be made. Garber was excused and the trial continued with 11 jurors. Shortly afterward it was brought out that a record of a previous conviction of De Perna had disappeared.

ROBBER PAIR PETITION ELY FOR PARDONS

Applications for pardons were made today to Gov. Ely by John J. Keating of South Boston and Carl Ghella of Roxbury, now serving long terms in state prison for robbery while armed. They will be heard Oct. 20.

TEXANS ASSURE ROOSEVELT OF BIG VOTE

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 14 (AP)—Texas, which four years ago gave its electoral votes to the Republican presidential nominee, will give the Democratic ticket "a large plurality" this year, Senator Tom Connally and Rep. Marvin Jones told Gov. Roosevelt, Democratic presidential nominee.

CERMAK'S OUSTER ASKED ON INSULL COUNT

Chicago, Oct. 14 (INS)—Two demands were filed with the state's attorney today to oust Mayor Anton J. Cermak from office because his name was on the lists of Insull "preferred investors."

Sullivan as Good as Endicott, Says Judge Donahue

The Sullivans are just as good as the Endicotts, observed Judge Frank J. Donahue, with vigor, from the bench in probate court today.

The former Democratic State chairman, sitting in Lynn for the first time since his appointment to the Superior Court bench, was hearing testimony in a long dispute between the city of Salem and John and Susan Diozzi.

On the land, which was taken by the city, a postoffice is being erected; the Diozzis want $40,000 and Salem is willing to pay $13,000.

David Frye, realty expert, was called as a witness for the city.

Frye started enumerating the aristocratic families that once lived near the site of the land in dispute and which have been displaced in the district by "less desirable residents who make the community disreputable."

"Just a minute!" interrupted Judge Donahue. "What are you trying to show, that because the Endicotts lived there years ago and the Sullivans live there now that the place is disreputable? You should be made to understand that whether we're Irish, Italian or Polack, we're all born equal."

"I agree," said Frye.

"You a should," said Donahue, and ordered Frye's testimony stricken from the record.

Ireland's Oldest Woman, 112, Dies

Dundalk, Northern Ireland, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Hon. Katherine Plunket, said to be Ireland's oldest inhabitant, died at her home here today. On Nov. 9 she would have been 112.

She was the daughter of the second Baron Plunket, Lord Bishop of Tuam.

Ely Condoles Reed on Death of Wife

Gov. Ely's secretary today sent the following telegram to former Senator James A. Reed at Kansas City:

"The governor, from Rochester, N. Y., instructs me to extend to you his deepest sympathy in the death of your beloved wife and to say that he mourns with you."

Insull Defies U. S. Arrest

'I WON'T VOTE FOR HOOVER' —JOHNSON

Senator Scores President's Failure; Says His Ambition, Not G. O. P., Is at Stake

San Francisco, Oct. 14 (AP)—Replying to a telegram from representatives of 70 Southern California newspapers asking him to make a declaration of support of the Republican national and state tickets, Senator Hiram W. Johnson, California Progressive Republican, said today:

"I cannot and will not support Mr. Hoover."

Johnson repeatedly has criticised the Hoover administration.

In his statement Senator Johnson said:

"For many years in the politics of this nation, two distinct political philosophies have constantly clashed, and in the present economic crisis these two conflicting philosophies stand out the one against the other in bold relief. On the one hand is the progressive, on the other, the ultra conservative.

HOOVER NO PROGRESSIVE

"I am a progressive Republican; Mr. Hoover is not. He has justly earned the title of ultra conservative.

"The progressive believes this government belongs to all its people, not to a favored or privileged few, and that it should be administered equally and impartially for all, high and low, rich and poor alike. The standpatter, paying lip service to common humanity, makes a mock of his words by his court of special classes, and his subserviency to special interests, and his indifference, as in the instances of the power trust and the sale of foreign securities to trusting American investors by international bankers, to the ruthless exploitation by them.

"The progressive thinks in

CALL YOUNGMAN 'DESERTER'

Lieutenant-Governor William S. Youngman, Republican candidate for Governor, is at odds with President Hoover's forces here, it was declared by Representative William H. Hearn, Democrat, of East Boston, at the Hotel Statler today.

The East Boston legislator, speaking to a group of Democratic party workers at registration meeting, said:

"Lieut.-Gov. Youngman made the declaration at Republican State committee headquarters a few days ago that he did not need President Hoover's help as much as Hoover needed his.

"He accused members of the committee of 'double-crossing' him and declared that in 1928 he did not need Hoover and does not need him now.

"This statement was made in the presence of James Maxwell Fassett, an assistant attorney-general of the United States, who has been speaking for Hoover. I understand that Mr. Fassett thought it was an act that was being put over for his benefit until he was disillusionized by workers in Republican headquarters, who informed him this was just what they had to contend with in this campaign.

"If Mr. Youngman is carrying Hoover with difficulty and Alonzo B. Cook, Republican candidate for auditor, is carrying Youngman with difficulty, I am beginning to wonder just who stands on his own feet in the Republican campaign."

Washington Extradition Proposals Declared Futile in Athens

By WILLIAM PARKER
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Athens, Greece, Oct. 14 (INS)—Apparently dashing American hopes of effecting his early extradition, the Greek government for the first time today officially announced its position with regard to Samuel Insull, former Chicago utilities magnate.

A spokesman for the Foreign Office said that:

First—Insull is a free man as long as he remains in Greece.

Second—The Greek government had no intention of deporting him.

Third—No extradition treaty is officially in existence between the United States and Greece.

Fourth—Arrival in Athens of an American warrant for Insull's arrest will not change the situation.

Insull wrote a letter to the American consul explaining his reasons for refusing to surrender his passport.

"Sir," he wrote, "I was very much surprised at your letter of yesterday informing me that the state department had instructed you to take up my passport.

"It seems that they don't know in Washington that my passport is valuable until February, 1934, and that by its authority I can stay out of America in any country I choose.

"Since the passport was issued by the country of which I am a citizen, its withdrawal is impossible especially while I am traveling through foreign countries.

$972 ALLSTON SAFE ROBBERY

Safe robbers, of the same band, police believe, whose members have been averaging two successful safe jobs a week, stole $972 today at the General Motors Acceptance Corporation building, 88 Brighton ave., Allston.

The same method of entry, a rear window, was used by this band and they abandoned the same type of tools which have been found left before by safe crackers who would not risk being seen carrying them away after a robbery.

The safe robbers forced open the office door on the first floor, knocked the combination off the big safe and ripped open the inside door.

Although they abandoned hammers, pliers and pry bars, they left no fingerprints behind.

BAIL BOOSTED IN HOLDING M'KNIGHT

Ex-Banker Arraigned on the Charge of $23,500 Building Frauds Thefts

With arraignment today of Edwin T. McKnight, former president of the closed Medford Trust Co., in Middlesex Superior Court, it was revealed that the grand jury had indicted him for six larcenies totaling $23,500 from Frankini Bros., Inc., Medford building contractors.

McKnight pleaded not guilty in a loud voice to each of the six counts, after which his lawyer and Asst. Dist. Atty. Frederic A. Crafts waged an argument over the amount of bail, which was finally set at $10,000.

KEPT CASH, IS CHARGE

The indictment is based on testimony by McKnight under questioning of Robert T. Rushnell at civil hearings in Boston.

He told them of receiving certain amounts from the Frankini concerns and turning the money over to a legislator and others, whom he refused to name, for assistance in getting school contracts for the Frankini company.

The government now alleges that McKnight pocketed this money himself, as there was no need of paying money to anybody to get the contracts, Frankini being the lowest bidder in all but one case.

The contracts were four in number, two consisting of the Medford High School addition, one to the Gleason School in West Medford and one to the new Somerville Junior High School.

TRIAL NEXT WEEK

Crafts said he would move for trial as soon as the grand jury finished its new investigation of the Medford Trust Co., which it is expected to do next Wednesday.

McKnight was arrested last night at his home on Terrace rd., Medford, and was not taken to the police station, bail being arranged for in his own living room.

Today the indicted banker arrived at the court house at East Cambridge in an automobile and paced up and down one of the corridors until Crafts arrived. Crafts directed him to the first session courtroom.

When his name was called he stepped forward briskly and seemed in better health than when undergoing the ordeal of trial earlier this year. His attorney, Jaspar Johnson, waived reading of the indictment.

BAIL INCREASED

No date was set for trial but McKnight was ordered to hold himself in readiness for day to day.

Atty. Johnson argued for a continuance of the $5000 bail set last night but Crafts declared:

"That amount is too small for a $23,500 larceny. I set $5000 last night merely as I would be sure to have him in court today. I was taking no chances on his getting away. I believe bail should be at least $10,000."

McKnight was released but the bond furnished was described as a temporary one by court officials, and, it is understood, different arrangements will be made on Monday.

EARLY INDICTMENT

McKnight in his Boston testimony told of receiving three amounts, $5000, $7000 and $2000, from the Franklin concern, but the government charges he received the following alleged to constitute larcenies:

June 21, 1929, $5000; July 10, 1929, $1500; July 18, 1929, $3000; July 31, 1929, $4000; August 8, 1930, $8000; August 15, 1930, $2000.

ROOSEVELT PLEDGES DEFINITE AID TO THE JOBLESS

HOOVER'S PROLONGED DELAY OF RELIEF CONDEMNED

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 14 (INS)—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt stood before the country today with a solemn promise that if elected President he would inaugurate a "definite long range plan" for dealing with unemployment relief and other social welfare work, which he holds are a "proper concern" of the Federal Government.

In a nation-wide radio address, the Democratic presidential nominee asserted that the primary responsibility for caring for the jobless rests upon local communities, but that when local funds are insufficient the obligation passes to state governments and then to the Federal Government.

"Where the state itself is unable successfully to fulfill this obligation it then becomes the positive duty of the Federal Government to step in and help," Roosevelt said. "That duty and responsibility the Federal Government should carry out promptly, fearlessly and generously."

Striking out vigorously at his Republican foes, the Democratic nominee charged the Hoover administration with doing nothing for two years to succor the victims of the depression. He said Congress finally forced President Hoover's hand and relief funds were made available for the first time this past summer.

MRS. HEARST SPEAKS

Gov. Roosevelt was preceded by Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, chairman of the Roosevelt-Garner women's league, who addressed the women of the country on the Roosevelt medallion campaign. She outlined reasons for her donation of $10,000 in prizes in selling the Roosevelt-Garner medallions. Mrs. Hearst spoke from New York city.

Speaking over two national net works before a microphone in the executive mansion, Gov. Roosevelt gave his views on social and relief legislation in a response to a questionnaire sent him by ten leading sociologists.

In response to their specific questions, the nominee endorsed a system of unemployment insurance reserves, made compulsory by the states, and supplemented by a system of federally co-ordinated state insurance offices.

SCHOOL PROBLEMS

"My own observation," he said, "leads me to believe that in many parts of the country we have tended to an educational system devised too greatly for academic training and professional careers.

"We know that already many of the professions are oversupplied and it is a fair guess that during the coming generation we shall devote more attention to educating our boys and girls for vocational pursuits, which are just as honorable, just as respectable and in many instances just as remunerative as are the professions themselves."

Roosevelt concluded with a moving appeal of the people of the nation to open up their hearts and purses for the relief of the unfortunate during the coming winter. He said:

"Let us who have jobs or money or shelter for ourselves and our families, share with the less fortunate. If we do this in every community throughout the land, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas day of 1932 will take on a new significance—the significance of a higher American ideal of social justice."

In discussing public works, Roosevelt said all building programs must be considered from the financial ability of the government to stand the cost.

He suggested that when the present industrial situation clears up, the government should set aside a "nest egg," to be used for public works in times of future depression.

Roosevelt charged that the unsound fiscal policies of the Republican administration had already made it difficult for the federal government to maintain a balanced budget. He added that this must be considered in considering the cost of a public works program.

Cannon Silent 40 Yrs. to Roar for Roosevelt

Falls City, Neb., Oct. 14 (AP)—If southeastern Nebraska is startled by a resounding boom after Nov. 8, it merely will be the roar of Barada's town cannon, breaking a 40-year silence to announce the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The cannon was fashioned to signalize the election of Grover Cleveland in 1888, but Republican leaders captured it, and used it to celebrate the election of Benjamin Harrison. Four years later the Democrats regained possession and put it to the use for which it had been designed.

Highlights in Roosevelt's Speech

"I am very certain that the obligation extends beyond the states and to the federal government itself when it becomes apparent that states and communities are unable to take care of the necessary relief work."

"From the long range point of view it would be advisable for governments of all kinds to set up in times of prosperity what might be called a nest egg to be used for public works in times of depression. That is a policy which we should initiate when we get back to good times."

"State of New York at special session of legislators, appropriated $250,000,000 for unemployment relief, made another appropriation of $5,000,000 recently and will vote on a bond issue of $30,000,000 for the same purpose on Nov. 8."

"It took the present administration in Washington almost three years to recognize the necessity of relief . . . For at least two years after the crash the only efforts made by the national administration to cope with the distress of unemployment was to deny its existence."

"On my recommendation a program of unemployment relief was under way in New York over a year ago, but in Washington relief funds in any large volume were not provided until this summer."

Believes in public works for unemployment relief, more especially those that can be made self-sustaining.

Favors system of unemployment insurance under State laws.

Favors co-ordinated employment offices such as were provided in the Wagner bill which "to my very great regret was vetoed by the President of the United States."

Appeals to whole nation for all possible assistance for the needy the coming winter and says that Thanksgiving and Christmas be made a special time for practising charity and less regret the more unfortunate in the community.

"Attempts have been made to cut the appropriations for child welfare work. It seems to me that this is the last place in which we should seek to economize. I cannot agree with the member of President Hoover's cabinet who asserts that this depression is not altogether a bad thing for our children."

"We must economize in other ways, but it shall never be said that the American people have refused to provide the necessities of life to those who, through no fault of their own, are unable to feed, clothe and house themselves. The first obligation of government is the protection of the welfare and well-being—the very existence of its citizens."

B.E.F. CHIEFTAIN TELLS OF VISIT TO HOOVER

Recepiton Proves the Charges Against Veterans False, Says Hoke Smith

On July 28, B. E. F. was routed from Washington by tear gas and bayonets in the hands of regular army troops called out by President Hoover. Yesterday, President Hoover received a delegation to present a resolution of censure and to hear what the B. E. F. leaders want for homeless ex-service men. Commander Hoke Smith, who headed the delegation, has written for International News Service his account of the interview.

By HOKE SMITH
Commander of the B. E. F.

Washington, Oct. 14 (INS)—As national commander of the bonus expeditionary force, I am glad President Hoover saw fit to receive the committee elected by its national convention.

We are glad he recognized the bonus expeditionary force as an organization worthy of consideration of the chief executive of the country to which we have pledged our loyalty.

We feel this proves the bonus expeditionary force was not the "criminal group" attacked by the Attorney General in September.

Our petition presented to Gen. Hines in the presence of the President aims at immediate relief of the destitute World War veterans by providing rations, bedding, clothing, etc.

Our severest censure was directed at Mr. Hoover, the individual, for the drastic eviction of the bonus expeditionary force, and not at the chief executive of the country we love so well. We feel this drastic action was because he did not understand the true situation or was misinformed by those on whom he relied for a true picture.

Gen. Hines has expressed a willingness to assist the Bonus Expeditionary Force in every way possible in alleviating the destitute condition of World War veterans and we have agreed upon the program to effect this relief.

We feel sure the Bonus Expeditionary Force, by establishment of state camps and local units for relief of the veterans, will aid materially in the general welfare of the country.

We did not pledge Mr. Hoover anything in the way of political support for any party. It is in our organization constitution that we are 100 per cent opposed to Mr. Hoover for re-election.

terms of human beings; the standpatter has little thought or concern for them. When Mr. Hoover became President, his philosophy of government became apparent. Before that we knew little or nothing of his policies or politics.

HOOVER'S AMBITION

"In your telegram, apparently, you attach party regularity in this crisis. I stress loyalty to the American people. You say you are the representative of 70 Southern California newspapers. If you were the representatives of 7000 newspapers, or just one ordinary American citizen, my answer would be the same.

"My first allegiance is to all the people of this State. I would not taint my record nor stultify myself now by abandoning the principles for which I have battled unceasingly during my career—the principles for which the sovereign people of California elected me in 1928.

"The Republican party is not at stake in this campaign. It is only the ambition of one man who but a little more than a decade ago did not know which was his party, and who before that had no American party at all.

SERVICE TO COUNTRY

"In the present cataclysm with 11,000,000 unemployed, and suffering and want on every hand, the man who puts his party fealty and his hope of political preferment above the welfare of our people does the worst possible disservice to his country.

"I recognize that each individual, according as he sees the light, must make his choice. I make mine. I cannot and will not support Mr. Hoover."

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14—Nina Wilcox Putnam, writer and lifelong Republican, will support Franklin D. Roosevelt for President.

Miss Putnam

"I have always been a Republican and still am, but this is a time when we must elect a strong man who will act according to his convictions, and whose administration will restore confidence to the common people," Miss Putnam said today.

"The day of 'big business' is over. Big business has had its chance and has failed. Now, the common people are acquiring an independence of their own, and are looking for a leader who recognizes them.

"When Mr. Hoover was nominated four years ago, I worked for him, but the events of the past four years have deeply disappointed me. I feel that the Republican party has become simply a machine, obedient to machine orders, while the Democratic party has retained a wider outlook."

She added that the Democrats had chosen a man who recognizes the importance of every element of the country, and believes that is the reason why so many Republicans will vote for him.

"Living abroad for five years, I had ample opportunity to observe the fatal effect of the Hoover foreign policy and his stand on the tariff. We cannot afford to let this situation continue—it is full of danger."

FORCED TO QUIT GUESTS

HOTELMEN HEAR LIQUOR PLEA

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 14 (AP)—Repeal of the prohibition amendment will brighten the lives of hotel operators, the annual convention of the American Hotel Association was told today.

Arthur L. Race of Boston, chairman of the committee on prohibition, predicted that "unquestionably the dry domination of the political situation in Congress will end with the election in November."

He added that "repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment is absolutely essential to the future success of the hotel industry."

Repeal, he said, will bring a "reduction in real estate taxes and the elimination of numerous nuisance taxes and the hotels will get a lot of business now going tos peakeasy proprietors."

Graf Zeppelin Stops at Rio de Janeiro

Rio De Janeiro, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Graf Zeppelin, German dirigible which completed another transatlantic flight from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to Pernambuco Wednesday, arrived here from Pernambuco at 6:35 a. m. today and departed again at 7:30 a. m.

Roosevelt to Announce Stand on Bonus in Near Future

Hammonton, N. J., Oct. 14 (INS)—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt in the "near future" will express his views on payment of the bonus to war veterans, he told Thomas B. Delker, local newspaper editor, in a letter received today.

Governor Roosevelt's letter to Delker, written in reply to the editor's request he announce his stand on this bonus question, read:

"I expect to make known my views on the question of the veterans' compensation in the near future. I believe that no one could have greater admiration and affection for our ex-service men than I have, and I deeply appreciate their services to their country.

"Coming into close contact with them, as I did in my duties as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I developed an interest in them which has never diminished. You may be sure that I was deeply distressed by the unfortunate situation relative to the veterans at Washington."

Nina Wilcox Putnam, Always G. O. P., Backs Roosevelt

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14—Nina Wilcox Putnam, writer and lifelong Republican, will support Franklin D. Roosevelt for President.

"I have always been a Republican and still am, but this is a time when we must elect a strong man who will act according to his convictions, and whose administration will restore confidence to the common people," Miss Putnam said today.

ROBINSON SEES LANDSLIDE

New York, Oct. 14 (AP)—Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, minority leader in the U. S. Senate and Alfred E. Smith's running mate in 1928, called on Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley today and announced with a grin that before this campaign is over he is going to make a speech on "hallucinatory omnipotence."

He would not say at whom the speech would be directed.

Sen. Robinson, who has been campaigning for the Democratic national and state tickets in Arkansas and Missouri, will leave tomorrow night, after a visit with Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt at Hyde Park, on a speaking tour that will carry him through Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois.

"It looks like a landslide for Roosevelt and Garner to me," Senator Robinson said.

Another visitor to Farley's office today was Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the latter part of the Wilson administration.

Colby, a Bull Moose supporter in 1912, said he had recently visited Michigan and found there, on the part of the oldtime progressives, "an extraordinary response to Gov. Roosevelt."

Japs Take Vast Area in Drive on Chinese

Harbin, Manchuria, Oct. 14 (INS)—More than a third of the Tungpien area fell into the hands of Japanese troops today, as they pressed their campaign against Chinese anti-Manchukuo rebels at Manchuli and Hailar.

Casualties were not tabulated, but a Japanese spokesman said:

"The troops are moving too fast to permit counting of dead bodies."

Miss Willis Acting Minister to Sweden

Washington, Oct. 14—For the first time in the history of the United States foreign service a woman is taking the place of a United States minister abroad in an important foreign capital.

Miss Willis

She is Miss Frances Elizabeth Willis, at Stockholm, Sweden, one of the two women in the nation's entire foreign service, the other being Miss Constance R. Harvey, vice-consul at Milan.

The absence of John Motley Morehead, American minister, now en route to this country, and of others above her in rank made Miss Willis Charge D'Affaires with full responsibilities to discharge all duties and functions of the head of the mission in Sweden.

Pershing Named in Suit for $50,000

New York, Oct. 14—General John J. Pershing and other directors of the American Legion War Memorial in Paris are named defendants in a $50,000 damage suit brought in Supreme Court here.

Gen. Pershing

The suit arises from abandonment of an international contract bridge tournament to raise funds for the memorial. Gerard Schaffer and Egon A. Tropp, originators of the bridge plan, alleged they were told that if they paid $2000 to "certain officials" the tournament would be arranged and all Legion posts would be pledged to raise funds.

The plaintiffs said they spent $2200 of their own money and committed themselves for $4050 more in arranging the tournament.

Mrs. Marion Read Granted Divorce

Oakland, Calif., Oct. 14—Mrs. Marion Young Read, suing Claire Windsor, film actress, for $100,000 for alienation of affections, was granted a decree of divorce from Alfred C. Read, a broker who turns actor after separating from his wife.

Mrs. Read

The name of Miss Windsor, previously designated by Mrs. Read as the "other woman," did not occur in the testimony upon which the decree was granted, although Mrs. Read presented four letters and a dozen photographs which court attaches said linked the actress and Read in a romance.

LEARY UNDER AN INVESTIGATION BY THE BAR

Association Reveals It Has Been Checking the Missing Medford Man's Record

Revelation that Atty. John F. Leary, missing secretary of the Medford schoolhouse building commission, has been under investigation since June by the Middlesex Bar Association was made today.

This came to light through a disclosure that officials of the Metropolitan Bond & Mortgage Corporation of Forest st., Medford, for which Leary had been counsel for five years, demanded and received his resignation last June.

TALK OF "RUBBER CHECKS"

At that time, according to officials of the company, there were claims that collections had been made on mortgages and the money not turned in to the company, and there was talk of "rubber checks."

During the company officials' meeting to demand the resignation, it was voted to register a complaint with the grievance committee of the Middlesex Bar Association against Leary. The grievance committee, it was disclosed today, was still investigating Leary's activities when he vanished.

Investigation of Leary's disappearance and his apparently tangled affairs continued today with Dist. Atty. Warren L. Bishop of Middlesex County assisting, following a visit from Police Chief Connors of Medford.

COURT ACTION SEEN

Chief Connors said no complaint had actually been made regarding Leary. He said he had talked with a man who spoke of taking court action against the missing lawyer but he would not say whether he contemplated action would be of a civil or criminal nature.

Atty. Leary has 10 days in which to file an inventory and account of the estate of Mrs. Annie E. Cremmons, under the order of Judge Legget, of Middlesex Probate court, and six days in which to petition for a hearing to prevent his ouster as a member of the Medford schoolhouse building commission.

WIFE CONFIDENT

Mayor Burke appointed Philip P. A. O'Connell, a Medford attorney, commissioner pro tem to fill the vacancy. The appointment becomes permanent if no protest is entered by Leary in seven days.

Mrs. Leary denied reports that her husband had patronized night clubs with another woman. She expressed confidence that he would return.

She said she had not heard from him since he left home as usual 16 days ago, kissing her and the three children.

BRUISED BY RING WORN BY ONE OF VISITORS

Appears Early With Member All Done Up, but Plunges Into His Daily Routine

Washington, Oct. 14 (AP)—President Hoover, after retiring early from a White House reception last night, with more than 1000 people still waiting to shake his hand, today made an early morning appearance with his right hand bandaged.

Dr. Joel T. Boone, White House physician, said the President was feeling fit, but had suffered a bruised hand in greeting more than 3000 people who filed past him before he retired. He had suffered a small cut, presumably from a ring worn by one of the guests.

Dr. Boone gave out the following statement:

"The President is in his normal good condition today. He followed his ordinary routine, commencing with exercise early this morning, as has been his custom since his inauguration.

GOOD HEALT HAND SPIRITS

"He is in excellent health and today is again in good condition and spirits.

"His hand is bruised and has several small cuts in the palm and between the fingers. The palm is black and blue, but the injury while painful was not serious."

The Chief Executive declared a moratorium on furher hand shaking during the day. Sec. Adams remarked after the Cabinet meeting that the President himself had joked about not shaking hands with his Cabinet officers, as they gathered for their semi-weekly meeting.

With his bandaged hand in evidence, the President posed for photographs with the University of Ohio football team and with a delegation from the Tau Beta Pi fraternity. He wished the team captain, George Collins, "good luck." The university plays the Naval Academy tomorrow.

HANDSHAKING BLAMED

Mr. Hoover did not shake hands with any one of those with whom he posed.

A few minutes after Mr. and Mrs. Hoover had retired from the gala scene last night Dr. Boone reported the President "feeling fine," but slightly tired from his active day.

Loses $20,000 Suit

Mrs. Margaret P. Geary of Cambridge, who sought, in an unusual case in Middlesex Probate Court, to have set aside a decree which allowed her late brother, Patrick Dillon, to adopt James J. Sullivan, an orphan. A $20,000 estate was involved and Sullivan won the suit. (Staff photo.)

BOSTON WOMAN SUES BARON

Nice, France, Oct. 14 (INS)—Persistent rumors that the Baroness von Schoenhoik, the former Alice Pryor Sullivan of Boston, Mass., was attempting to divorce her titled Austrian husband were confirmed today when she admitted she filed suit nearly a year ago in the Grasse courts.

"And I suppose," she added dryly, "that ought to make me a 'grass' widow."

The baroness, who is nearly 60, is the widow of a New York financier named Harberson, who left her $5,000,000.

She was divorced once before from Baron von Schoenhoik when they had been married less than a year. After years of separation she met him on the Riviera. They fell in love again and were remarried three years ago.

Coincident with the divorce announcement, the baroness revealed she was selling her beautiful villa "Alice," long one of the show places of the Riviera.

AL, COOLIDGE ASK ECONOMY

Chicago, Oct. 14 (AP)—An open letter bearing the joint signatures of former President Calvin Coolidge, former Governor Alfred E. Smith and four other nationally known men, and declaring that "the general public will find itself in a condition of servitude" unless all governmental costs are reduced, was made public here today.

The letter was addressed to Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, chairman of the National Economy League, and was read by him to a meeting of the executive committee of the league held to complete arrangements for the first national convention of the organization in Washington, on Dec. 12 and 13.

In additioon to the names of Smith and Coolidge, the letter bore the signatures of Newton D. Baker, former secretary of war; Elihu Root, former secretary of state; Gen. Pershing and Admiral Sims. All six are members of the advisory council to the league.

LORD CECIL IN PEACE PLEA

Lord William Cecil, bishop of Exeter, Eng., former chaplain to King Edward VII and the reigning King George, is in Boston today to preach the Sunday sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral. Lady Florence Cecil, his wife, accompanied him here from New York.

Lord Cecil appealed for world peace in an interview today. A union between the United States and England would do much to bring about world peace, he said.

Three sons of the couple were killed in action during the World War and a fourth returned home badly wounded. Lord Cecil is the son of the late Lord Salisbury, who was three times prime minister of England.

Ursula Parrott Divorced

Bridgeport, Ct., Oct. 14 (INS)—A divorce was granted today to Ursula Parrott, novelist, from her bankerhusband, Charles T. Greenwood, of New York. Miss Parrott did not ask for alimony. She keeps her maiden name.

Insull Is Carefull of Suitcases

London, Oct 14 (INS)—Samuel Insull's air trip from Milan, Italy, to Salonika, Greece, last Friday cost him approximately $3,440, an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Milan said today.

The pilot was quoted as saying:

"Insull kept himself under perfect control during the flight.

"But he had three suitcases with him and appeared extremely anxious about them."

CHAPLIN MOVIE FIGHT RENEWED

Los Angeles, Oct. 14 (INS)—Lita Gray Chaplin, former wife of Charles Chaplin, is seeking court permission to place her two sons in motion pictures.

This is Mrs. Chaplin's third attempt to have the two boys, Charles Spencer Chaplin, Jr., 7, and Sidney Earl Chaplin, 6, appear before the camera. The father has blocked all moves by his wife.

DILBOY PRICES UP TO CITY

Admission charges at Dilboy Field, Somerville, the subject of hundreds of complaints, were put up to the city solicitor for decision today by the board of aldermen. The field is under a 99-year lease to the city. Hundreds of citizens complained an admission charge should not be authorized for any event.

Cantor Kwarten in Dorchester Services

Zavel Kwarten, noted cantor of the synagogue at Telaviv, Palestine, will officiate at the Succoth celebration at the Dorchester-Mattapan Hebrew school beginning tonight. Cantor Kwarten is known in this country and in Europe, having sung at the largest synagogues in both. He has also given concerts at the Metropolitan Opera House and Carnegie Hall in New York. He arrived here yesterday.

American Woman, 5 Taken Off Seaplane

Cherbourg, France, Oct. 14 (INS)—Mrs. J. J. James of New York and five guests were taken off a giant airplane in the harbor today when waves inundated the cabin. En route to Egypt, the party put in here and the plane was at anchor when the storm came.

Attempt to Abduct Millionaire Foiled

Redlands, Cal., Oct. 14 (INS)—A plan to kidnap Clarence White, millionaire Cleveland philanthropist and brother of an officer of the White Truck Company, and Dr. Charles Lombard, rich Redlands physician, was thwarted today when sheriff's deputies arrested three men in an automobile near Dr. Lombard's residence. Ropes and sheets and heavy coats were found in the autohobile of the suspects.

Franchise League Fights Bond Issue

The Public Franchise League, through its attorney, Wallace H. Walker, today asked the state public utilities commission to reopen the public hearing on petition of Lowell Gas Light Co. for authority to issue $950,000 in bonds. The league desires to offer additional opposition.

Society Eyes All Turned on Rockefeller-Hooker Bridal

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER

New York, Oct. 14 (INS)—The coming marriage of pretty Blanchette Hooker, daughter of the Elon Huntington Hookers, of this city and Greenwich, Ct., and John D. Rockefeller, 3d, heir to many of the Standard Oil millions, ranks as the most important wedding of the 1932-33 season.

The ceremony will be solemnized in the Riverside Church, on Riverside Drive, known as the Rockefeller Church, inasmuch as the magnificent edifice was erected with money supplied by the future benedict's father and grandfather.

The ultra-exclusive Colony Club in Park ave. will form the setting for the wedding reception.

The future Mrs. Rockefeller is a granddaughter, on the paternal side of Mr. and Mrs. Horace B. Hooker and a direct descendant of Thomas Hooker, founder of Hartford, Ct.

The father of the bride-to-be, well-known civil engineer, was a member of a private commission that inspected the Panama and Nicaraguan canal routes in 1898 and was deputy superintendent of public works under Theodore Roosevelt, when the latter was governor of New York.

Young Rockefeller, who despite the vast Rockefeller wealth is very unostentatious and dresses in the simplest fashion, is more than six feet in height and was considered one of the most popular members of his class at Princeton.

John's paternal grandmother, Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., will be remembered as Laura Spelman, and on the maternal side he is a grandson of the late U. S. Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Providence.

He is a great-nephew of the late William Rockefeller and a nephew of Winthrop W. Aldrich, who married Harriet Alexander, daughter of that "great lady," Mrs. Charles B. Alexander.

He is the brother of Mrs. David M. Milton, the former Abby Rockefeller; Nelson A. Rockefeller, who wed Mary T. Clark; Laurence S. Rockefeller, Winthrop Rockefeller and David Rockefeller.

CAMPAIGNING BY PLANE

State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley, in his campaign for re-election, has been using a novel means of getting his candidacy before the voters. At a recent big outdoor rally in Norwood, while Lieut.-Gov. William S. Youngman was speaking, more than 10,000 of Hurley's cards were dropped from an airplane. The card carries endorsements from the Boston press, Republican and Democrat alike.

MRS. BROWN HOME

Mrs. Larue Brown of Boston, one of the vice chairmen of the Democratic state committee, has arrived back from abroad in time to plunge into the campaign. Mrs. Brown spent more than two months in central Europe. She arranged her itinerary so that she would be back in Boston in time to devote her energy to the work of the committee.

Congressman John W. McCormack is recalling to his audiences the speech made by Governor Roosevelt in Mechanics Hall here for "Al" Smith in 1928, in that address the governor said:

"If any person votes against Governor Smith because of his religion, may God have mercy on his miserable soul."

SMITH TO STUMP

Commissioner of Labor and Industries Edwin S. Smith is going to take the stump in the interest of the Democratic ticket. Four years ago he was speaking for another Smith, the former governor of New York. He will tell what Governor Ely has done to stamp out the sweat shops and to make contractors obey the laws in regard to wages and preference for veterans.

GRANFIELD PICKED FOR SURE CONGRESS WINNER AGAIN

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

Springfield, Oct. 14—William J. Granfield—who was to baseball at Notre Dame what Knute Rockne was to football — will be re-elected to Congress from the Springfield-Holyoke District.

The Democrats of Massachusetts thereby will conserve the gain they made in one of the most sensational and upsetting bye elections ever held in this country.

Cong. Granfield

From the ward precincts of Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee and Northampton to the tiniest hamlet along the Connecticut River, there is the unanimous expression of belief that Granfield, without great difficulty, will defeat his Republican opponent, Joshua L. Brooks.

The circumstances of the first election to Congress of this once-great Notre Dame athlete were dramatic.

Kirk Kaynor, Republican, was the Congressman—a beloved young man and devotee of aviation. He set out in a plane from Washington to pass the Christmas holiday with his family at Springfield. A light fall of snow developed into a storm of gale proportions. Down went the plane. Kirk Kaynor was buried beneath its wreckage. The community paid its tribute of affection to him—and then a special election was held, to fill his seat.

DEFEAT FOR HOOVER

This was in the spring of 1930. Mr. Hoover has been President a year. The Congress was overwhelmingly Republican. The vacant district had been overwhelmingly Republican, and had been represented some 30 years prior to Kaynor by Frederick H. Gillett, speaker of the eHouse.

Granfield went in, an unterrified Democrat, against those stupendous odds. He attacked the alleged inefficiency of Mr. Hoover. He declared for repeal of prohibition in a district assumedly dry. And, to the surprise of the nation, HE WAS ELECTED. The country hailed this as the first repudiation of Mr. Hoover.

It marked the turning point in American politics of this period. Granfield ran for election again, at the regular canvass in the fall of 1930, was rejected by a majority of 9000 and the country chose a Democratic national House of Representatives.

ANSWERS EVERY CHARGE

Congressman Granfield's opponent is the same Mr. Brooks who was rejected two years ago. He is 65, and wealthy. He has devoted much talent to the New England States Industrial Exposition. He is said not to have the "proper flair" for politics and its forensic requirements.

Mr. Brooks, urging the election of Mr. Hoover, suggests to his audiences that "We should not swap horses while crossing the stream?" His opponents reply to him, "Then why swap from Granfield?"

He says that Congress is controlled by Southern Democrats. They reply to him that if that is a fact it is somewhat mysterious that Connery of Lynn got the chairmanship of the influential Committee on Labor; Douglass of Boston of Education; McCormack of Boston a seat on the powerful Ways and Means Committee, and the baby-congressman, Granfield, a place on the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Brooks says that Speaker Garner was an advocate of pork-barrel legislation, for Southern advantage. Mr. Granfield says:

"Now about the new postoffices I have obtained for West Springfield, Chicopee, Ludlow, Chicopee Falls, Indian Orchard and South Hadley?"

Mr. Brooks says:

"They will cost the government $-4,000,000." Mr. Granfield replies, "What of it? They will save the government $3,000,000 in rent and pay for their cost in no time."

From these replies and counter-replies it seemed to the groups of men I met in several western townships that the art of public debate has been acquired by Congressman Granfield, if not by Congressman-Would-Be Brooks.

HITS VETS' OUSTER

Brooks is now shooting at Granfield on the soldiers' bonus, for which he voted. Mr. Granfield replies it is better to pay the veterans what is owed them than to expose their breasts to the bayonet "in a ferocious manner that might do credit to a Russian czar if not to the President of the United States of America, a country in which all people are supposed to have the right to address their grievances to the Congress.

"At least I have tried to do something to relieve the depression, with its intolerable hardships upon the plain American men, women and child ren," says Granfield. "I have been for an American program of public works, in aid of our American people, and have not devoted my energies to cancelling our debts in behalf of foreign countries."

Things, economically, out here are not different than elsewhere. The tobacco and onion growers complain of low prices, the latter of restricted markets. The textile mills and metal factories are so-so, if that well. Business men still buy red ink for their ledgers. Under these conditions and because of the respective equipments and attainments of Messrs. Granfield and Brooks, the former seems to be the betting choice. Without much, if any, doubt.

DR. WASHBURN CONSECRATED AS BISHOP

Orange, N. J., Oct. 14—In the presence of several hundred prominent clergy and laymen, Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, was consecrated bishop coadjutor of the Newark diocese today.

The consecration ceremony, lasting three hours, was performed by Rt. Rev. James DeWolf, bishop of Rhode Island; Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, who has been bishop of Newark, and Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill of Massachusetts.

It was announced that Bishop Washburn will return to Boston to preach a farewell sermon at Emmanuel Church, where he has served for three years.

Led by trumpeters, the clergymen walked in procession from the parish house to Grace Church, where the presentation of the bishop-elect was made by Rt. Rev. Samuel Babcock Booth, bishop of Vermont, and Rt. Rev. John T. Dallas, bishop of New Hampshire.

The certificate of election was read by Rev. J. Fred Hamblin, rector of St. John's, Newark, and the canonical testimonial by Charles W. Parker, supreme court justice.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, bishop of Pittsburgh, formerly of Boston, read the litany in the communion service which formed part of the consecration rite. A luncheon and reception followed the ceremony.

Woman Kills 2 Children and Self in Mad Plunge

Milwaukee, Oct. 14—Crowds gazed horror-struck as Mrs. Aurelia Libo Lorenz hurled two young children, their arms and legs bound, from the 16th floor of the Schroeder Hotel here and then leaped to her death after them.

The children screamed in terror as the woman held them, first one, then the other, firmly on the window sill, then pushed them to hurtle to their death below.

Scores of pedestrians were passing the Schroeder, a leading hotel on the city's main street. Several of them were narrowly missed by the bodies of the children and that of Mrs. Lorenz.

The victims of the woman's insane frenzy were Milton, five, and Vivian, four, children of her brother, Rudolph Libo. She had been given their care for the day. She was the former wife of a Milwaukee contractor.

The motive—the insane motive—was vengeance for a wrong, real or fancied, dating back 12 years.

"Something to remember me by," was the phrase used by Mrs. Lorenz in a long and incoherent note she left behind.

Pending the long process of investigation through family inquiries, the note was the only evidence on which the police could work. They found it, an almost unreadable scrawl, lying on a dresser in the hotel room. The signature was "Aurelia Libo"—the maiden name of Mrs. Lorenz.

The first paragraph said:

"I know what I have done. I have been forced to do it on account of a wrong my brother, Rudolph Libo, did me twelve years ago, and by not telling me anything about it since many years proves already there is nothing I can do about it."

The letter rambled on, complaining of the treatment her folks had given her.

"I warned them hundreds of times to give me my money back," one passage said. "What I done isn't anything to compare with what I got all these years."

From the hotel officials it was learned that the woman had arrived alone, registered under the name of "Dolores O'Brien, Chicago," and stayed in her room until the tragedy.

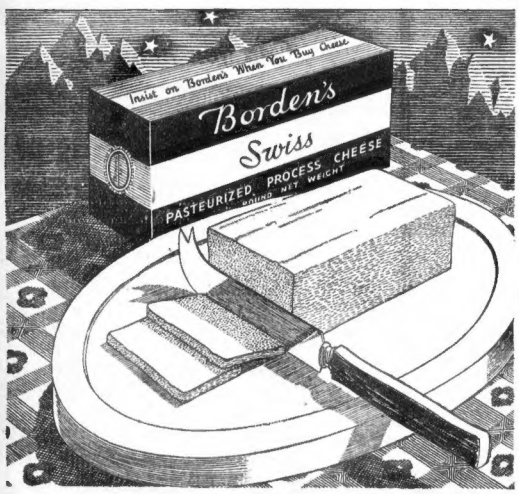
YOU WON'T TASTE SUCH GRAND SWISS CHEESE AS THIS



IF you went to Switzerland itself, you couldn't find Swiss Cheese with such mouth-melting deliciousness as Borden brings you.

For Borden itself searched the whole world over—found the finest Swiss Cheese made—and then made a better one. You only have to taste Borden's to discover the difference. It's so extra-creamy, so nut-sweet, so mellow. Out of hundreds of people who tasted both Borden's and imported Swiss without knowing which was which, the great majority preferred Borden's.

You'll find Borden's Swiss at your grocer's. The cheese is dewy-fresh when you buy it—and the foil-lined package keeps it that way. There's no waste. Borden's Swiss is decidedly kind to your pocketbook.

Today, get a package of it. You'll like it—your children will like it—and your husband will go for it in a great big way. It's that good!

THE RISE AND FALL OF SAMUEL INSULL

Herewith is the second chapter of the life story of Samuel Insull, Chicago utilities magnate, whose gigantic financial kingdom collapsed with a crash that echoed into every corner of the nation and affected investors beyond the environs of the United States.

(Copyright, 1932.)

Samuel Insull's first meeting with Thomas A. Edison, the great father of the electrical industry, also brought him face to face with his first major problem of financing electrical enterprises.

His early contacts with the inventor, from whom he obtained his fundamental knowledge of the electrical business, coupled with his genius for money-raising, enabled him to build his great public utility empire during the next half century.

Thrilled at the prospect of becoming intimately associated with the hero of his boyhood days, the young English shorthand clerk arrived in New York on February 23, 1881. He was then just 21. Edison, whose fame already had spread around the world, was about 34.

After two years of apprenticeship in Edison's London office, where he had taken dictation and learned something of the technical end of the telephone business, the enthusiastic young stenographer was ready to fall at the feet of the great inventor.

He stepped from the gangplank at 8 p. m. and hurried to the office that Edison had opened at 65 Fifth ave. for the exploitation of his electric light and power system. Their meeting marked the real starting point of one of the most spectacular business careers in American history.

Edison's hair already was iron-gray. His complexion was pallid from constant midnight study but his eyes were keen.

It was on this first night, a few hours after his arrival in the United States, that Edison placed before his young secretary the problem of securing money to finance the four manufacturing establishments that he wanted to create.

On this night, also, Edison gave his new employe a fair sample of his methods of work. It was 4 o'clock the next morning before Edison suddenly demanded:

"Had supper, young man?"

"No, sir," responded young Insull.

"Well," said Edison, "go get something to eat and hurry back here. We have a lot to do before morning."

Insull ate hurriedly and dashed back to his employer's office. Edison then explained his plan to build the four manufacturing plants. One was to be for the production of incandescent lamps, another for the manufacture of dynamos and motors, a third for the manufacture of underground conductors and the fourth for the production of miscellaneous switches, sockets and other electrical appliances.

"Insull," he said suddenly, "I want you to tell me where I can get the money to do all of this."

From his pocket he drew a checkbook on the Drexel, Morgan Company and showed young Insull that he had $70,000 in the bank. He recalled that Insull had been writing letters from London to Edward H. Johnson, his engineer, telling of the amounts of money they were to make in various European countries. He informed his young secretary that Johnson was sailing for Europe at 5 a. m. the next day.

Cash In a Hurry

"You have got to tell me where to get the money between now and the time he sails, because Johnson is going over there to get it," he said.

Insull, anxious to make a good impression upon his new chief, sparred for time and demanded to know how much money was wanted.

"I don't see how you can expect me to tell you where to get money, when you cannot tell me how much you want," he countered.

Years later Mr. Insull often recalled that conversation and in his speeches often referred to the episode as his first great money-raising problem. He many times remarked that he solved it successfully, that he got the necessary money and that the plants were soon built, but he never told the details of that first effort.

This problem was to be followed in the next 50 years with hundreds of other questions of finance, some of them easy to solve, many, of them hard. It was his failure to solve the major problem of meeting a $10,000,000 note maturity of the Middle West Utilities, due last June, that marked the beginning of the collapse of his rule of the great utility empire.

When Insull arrived in America there was no electric light and power business. There was only the system at Menlo Park, N. J., which showed experimentally what Edison hoped to accomplish.

The houses of Mr. Edison, his work shops and his laboratory were lighted as were no other places in the world. Glowing carbon filaments encased in small glass bulbs sent out their feeble rays to prove that here was a new way to harness electricity.

Edison's workshop was operated by an electric motor. A small lamp factory in the valley nearby was run partly by electricity and partly by steam.

Insull had seen his first lighted incandescent lamp while working for Col. George E. Gouraud in England. It was taken there by Johnson on a trip from America in 1880. The filament used then was carbonized paper.

A few days after his arrival, Insull cabled a friend in Europe and told him of the wonders of the Menlo Park system, of people reading and working at night by the light of the incandescent lamp. The friend replied by return mail, suggesting that Insull had fallen into bad company and let his imagination run away with him.

First Edison Plant

The crude experimental station at Menlo Park, the laboratory and the small electric lamp factory comprised the electric light and power industry of the world when young Insull arrived on the scene. The plant had been constructed with funds supplied by the old Edison Electric Light Co., owner of the patents. There was the small lamp factory, but there were no factories for the manufacture of the other equipment needed in the operation of a great utility system. There was not a cable manufacturer in the world who would take a contract to supply underground conductors and guarantee their operation and no factory existed that could build generative machinery required to produce the energy needed.

The existing sockets and switches were of the crudest character.

Many doubted that the Menlo Park experimental system could be operated successfully.

There was only one man then who had confidence that he had solved the problem, just one who understood what a system of electric light and power should be. That man was Thomas A. Edison, the teacher of Samuel Insull.

The third fascinating chapter of this life story of Samuel Insull will appear tomorrow.

FINDS AN EFFECTIVE TREATMENT FOR ARTHRITIS

A Pasadena man who had been bedridden with Arthritis (stiff joints) for three years reports that he secured a prescription which restored him to an active life. He then supplied the formula to a number of others who were afflicted with Arthritis, Neuritis, Lumbago, Gout, Sciatica and various other forms of Rheumatism, and they, too, reported their first relief. Renton's Hydrocin Tablets are prescribed by many physicians and indorsed by the leading druggists. No matter what other treatments you have taken or how badly you have suffered from any form of Rheumatism caused by excessive uric acid, you should give Renton's Hydrocin Tablets a trial. Just ask The Epstein Drug Co., Scollay Sq., or send name and address to Renton, Desk 895, Pasadena, Calif. Do this today.

ROOSEVELT HAS 31 STATES IN DIGEST POLL

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt increases his lead over President Hoover slightly in the fourth week's returns of nearly 2,000,000 ballots from 36 states in the Literary Digest's nation-wide presidential poll, reported in tomorrow's issue of the magazine.

Of the 1,983,634 votes tabulated Hoover receives 781,431, or 39.29 per cent; Roosevelt receives 1,062,087, or 53.56 per cent, and Norman Thomas, 106,352, or 5.36 per cent of the total cast to date.

Eighteen new states are reported in the current returns. The only one of these in which Hoover is leading is Vermont. Roosevelt is shown capturing the other 17—Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming.

HOOVER HAS ALL N. E.

The Hoover strength is confined to the six New England states, which he is shown carrying solidly, and New Jersey. Roosevelt is leading in the other 31 states from which returns have been received and tabulated so far.

Hoover is indicated gaining strength in California, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island in all of which states he shows increases over last week's ratio. Returns from Massachusetts this week show a decrease in his percentage of the total vote there.

In an analysis of "how the same voters voted in 1928" Roosevelt appears to be obtaining more than one-half of his vote from former Republicans in California and Michigan while in the nine other states of Iowa, Kansas, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Wyoming he has more votes from former Republicans than he has from former Democrats.

The same analysis reveals that Roosevelt has increased his inroads into Republican ranks of four years ago throughout the nation, gaining 39.64 per cent of his entire strength from Hoover adherents this week as against 37.96 per cent in last week's report.

Roosevelt continues to carry California, the home state of the President, by a lead of nearly 2 to 1. He is ahead also in his own state of New York by a vote of 156,447 to 145,554.

Calculating the current return on an electoral college basis, Hoover would receive 57 votes and Roosevelt 356.

Massachusetts leads the Republican column giving 58.09 per cent of its vote to the President, taking the lead from New Hampshire which had this rank last week.

Roosevelt is indicated receiving a clear majority of all votes cast over all six other presidential aspirants in two of the 35 states reported this week.

RETURNS FROM CITIES

In second returns from Providence, R. I., and Los Angeles, Calif., Hoover is leading in the eastern city and Roosevelt in the western one. Roosevelt has comfortable leads also in second reports from Pittsburgh and Cleveland, in the figures following:

	Hoover	Roosevelt
Providence (2d return)	4,318	3,197
Los Angeles	18,245	36,826
Cleveland	9,308	12,955

How Nominees Stand In Nation-Wide Poll

Washington, Oct. 14—The tabulation that follows shows the total vote thus far recorded for President Hoover and Gov. Roosevelt in the nationwide Presidential poll of the Boston Evening American in cooperation with all other Hearst morning, evening and Sunday papers in the United States.

It also shows the majority each candidate has in each State in which he is leading.

In addition, it gives the gain of each candidate on the latest returns received from each State, as compared with the last preceding report from the State. These state reports are usually a week apart.

The final feature of this table shows the net gain of each candidate in each State where he has improved his position, as compared with the last preceding report from that State.

BATTLE FOR SIX STATES TO END CAMPAIGN

Washington, Oct. 14 (AP)—The presidential wars of 1932 are entering their last phase with drumfire all along the line, but with the heaviest artillery moving into position for a final, concentrated bombardment on two important salients in the East and Middle West.

This week the action has been scattered and various, only a foretaste of what is to come. Gov. Roosevelt has spoken from Albany, outlining his views on relief. Former President Coolidge, in Madison Square Garden, asked for the re-election of President Hoover. Former Senator James A. Reed, chosen by the Democrats to reply at Des Moines to Mr. Hoover, asked for the election of Mr. Roosevelt.

Meantime, in the political dugouts farther back, the high commands of the two parties were taking stock for the long awaited turn of mid-October, and planning their last head-long dashes toward the Nov. 8 objective.

Enough of these plans are now known to indicate they point especially to the eastern states of New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts, and to the midwestern states of Ohio, ndiana and Illinois.

President Hoover will speak tomorrow night in Cleveland. It is likely he will go even farther west a week later, swinging through Indiana and Illinois to St. Louis. Still later he will be in the East—New York certainly and perhaps also New Jersey and Massachusetts.

Governor Roosevelt leaves Albany Tuesday for his second extended tour. He will speak as far West as St. Louis, and travel through the border states and south to Atlanta before he returns to wind up his campaign in New England and New York.

Former Governor Alfred E. Smith is expected to put much of the Democratic emphasis on the East during the last days of October. Tentative plans route him through New York, New Jersey and New England, starting early next week.

Speaker John N. Garner speaks tonight from New York in his first major address of the campaign. He plans to deal "in a general way" with criticisms of Democratic congressional leadership that have been voiced by President Hoover and former President Coolidge.

Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, has returned from his trip to the Pacific coast. He spoke yesterday in Chicago and will be kept busy henceforth in the East.

2 CANDIDATES TIED IN POLL

By COLE E. MORGAN

Washington Oct. 14 (US)—Here's one for the book.

The tabulators today counted 23,064 postcard ballots in the nationwide presidential poll of the Boston Evening American in cooperation with all the other Hearst morning, evening and Sunday papers in the United States.

The divided exactly even—11,532 for President Hoover and 11,532 for Gov. Roosevelt.

This evidences how close the presidential race has become in the central industrial states.

The ballots under consideration came from Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

Delaware returned 30 votes, 15 for Hoover and 15 for Roosevelt. Maryland stuck to its guns as a definite Roosevelt state by giving him 936 to 420 for Hoover.

Pennsylvania, contributing 6804 ballots, gave Hoover 3450 and Roosevelt 3154. This was the second consecutive week Hoover led in Pennsylvania.

Michigan, like Maryland, continued to favor Roosevelt, giving him a 1214 vote to 1093 for Hoover.

Ohio again added to Hoover's lead there with a vote of 2254 to 1967 for Roosevelt.

Indiana came through with a 1662 Hoover vote to 1557 for Roosevelt.

Illinois was so nearly even that it gave Roosevelt only a 51 majority out of 5327 ballots.

There can be no mistaking that the Republicans are fighting and fighting hard to overthrow the early advantage Governor Roosevelt obtained in this important section.

More Illinois Widows

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 14 (AP)—These statisticians are always finding out something. In Bloomington there are more than twice as many widows as there are widowers. The figures: Widows, 1737; widowers 620.

"STAR" MAKER PASSES ON

Detroit, Oct. 14 (AP)—Miss Jessie Bonstelle, director of the Detroit Civic Theater and for 22 years associated with the development of stock companies in Detroit theatrical circles, died here today of heart trouble.

Credited as a "maker of stars," Miss Bonstelle trained such stars as Katherine Cornell, William Powell, Ann Harding, Minor Watson and other prominent stage folk.

Imagine His Surprise When He Opens Lid!

An auto thief stole a closed truck in Malden sq. today and by the time you read this he has probably recovered from his surprise. A casket was inside the truck. Perhaps he lifted the cover and then again perhaps he didn't.

It was an empty casket, a sample, which H. Stanley McLellan, Malden salesman for a casket company, was planning to show a Malden undertaker.

Betty Gow Ready To Return To U. S.

Glasgow, Oct. 14 (INS)—Betty Gow, nurse of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., when he was kidnaped at Hopewell, N. J., last March, was here with her mother today. Reports she planned to leave for America toward the end of this month were confirmed.

ELY SPEAKS FOR LEHMAN AND ROOSEVELT

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 14 (US)—President Hoover's failure to secure the modification of the Volstead law was criticized by Governor Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts, in an address at a large Democratic rally here last night.

Governor Ely asserted that President Hoover has failed to grasp the economic importance of modifying the Volstead law. He called it a $5,000,000,000 proposition which would have furnished employment for many thousands and provided abundant revenue for the federal government.

The speaker declared that he had come to speak in New York State in the interest of the Democratic national and state tickets. He paid tribute to Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic presidential nominee, and Lieut.-Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, candidate for governor of New York.

Picking up a copy of a magazine edited by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, the speaker waved it in the air and declared Smith will swing Massachusetts into the Democratic column when he takes the stump.

"I stand shoulder to shoulder with the man I did my best to nominate in Chicago and urge the election of Governor Roosevelt to the presidency."

Candid Camera Views the Man Chosen as Governor Roosevelt's Successor

INTIMATE STUDIES OF LIEUT.-GOV. HERBERT H. LEHMAN, WHOSE NOMINATION UNITED DEMOCRACY IN NEW YORK

Lieut.-Gov. Lehman at the luncheon given in the Hotel Commodore, New York, to the nominees on the Democratic State ticket. He was caught here in a listening attitude.

As he pensively lighted a smoke, the nominee for governor of New York was photographed by the Candid camera. His nomination united the Roosevelt and Smith forces.

Making notes on points he had heard in another address at the luncheon. Note the expression on his face—as if a decision had been reached by the words he had just listened to.

And here is the prospective Governor of New York in action. He is applauding an address or punctuating a point he himself has made. He is a staunch Roosevelt man. (Int. News Photos.)

DIVORCE GIVEN MRS. LEONARDI

Mrs. Helen M Leonardi, of Commonwealth ave Allston, was granted a divorce today in Suffolk probate court from William B. Leonardi, Fayette st., restaurateur, for cruel and abusive treatment. Mrs. Leonardi told Judge McCook their married life for 11 years had been happy, but in December, 1931, a change came.

Punches, slaps and abusive language was testified to by Mrs Leonardi under questioning by her attorney, Edwin D. Gallagher.

Vet Who Punched Officer in Traffic Row Wins Probation

Traffic Officer Michael O'Connell of the Mills station didn't care much for the way Harry Moore of Saugus introduced himself to him yesterday and had Moore up before Judge Murray in Municipal court today to determine a delicate point of etiquette.

O'Connell told the court he was doing traffic duty at Washington and State st. on the night of Sept. 10 when a car drove past him and gave a red light.

He stopped the car, and was informed the driver was Miss Marie Murray, not a red light specialist, when Moore stepped out of the car.

"Do you know who I am?" Moore asked O'Connell.

"That I don't," answered O'Connell.

"Well, I have a special card from President Hoover which entitles me to drive through traffic lights anywhere."

"I never heard of such a thing," said O'Connell, a bit awed.

"Well, did you ever hear of this?" continued Moore.

And with that, he landed a punch that broke O'Connell's nose. To make sure his introduction was effective, Moore then kicked O'Connell.

When it was explained to Judge Murray that Moore was one hundred per cent crippled in a war of sartorial wounds received at Chicago, Quincy, and that medical testimony proved Moore sometimes acted irresponsibly, Judge Murray put Moore on probation for six months.

GREECE SHIELDS INSULL

iren who has lived honorably and whose life is a history of his own country, and try to deprive him indirectly of his citizenship, since withdrawal of a passport without any right has no other significance."

The fuss in office was precipitated over a report cabled to the United States that the foreign minister had asked Insull to leave the country.

"No such statement was ever made and the government has no such intention," the spokesman said.

HOLDS HIS PASSPORT

Meanwhile, the American legation awaited instructions following Insull's flat refusal to surrender his passport which he has placed in the custody of his attorney, Charles Lada.

The Greek Government has not yet replied to the letter from the American legation requesting that Insull be detained pending extradition.

"In due course," the foreign office spokesman said, "the Government will reply that it is unable to accede to the request because no extradition treaty exists between the United States and Greece."

Insull himself today revealed he feared he might be kidnaped.

Wanted by Chicago authorities to answer indictments of embezzlement and larceny, the executive is worried over the possibility of being forced aboard some American ship and carried home to face his accusers.

He showed surprise when told today he was still under secret police surveillance.

He decided to test for himself whether he was being watched by police.

TRAILED IN AUTO

He entered an automobile with an interpreter, Peter Vanech, who formerly owned a hotel in Stamford, Ct., and is now visiting Athens.

There was immediate activity when the former utilities magnate entered the car.

Three men who had been loitering across the street from the Petit Palais Hotel, ran after the automobile, hailing a taxi as they ran.

They got into the cab and followed Insull's car as it drove past the Acropolis.

After this adventure, and when Insull returned to the hotel he exclaimed:

"You're right, three of them followed us. I thought I had been freed from surveillance. I wonder why they are doing that? Probably it has something to do with my refusal to surrender my passport."

BRING ON ALLEN, SAYS RITCHIE

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 14 (INS)—"It makes no difference to me," Gov. Albert Ritchie said today when informed that the scheduled debate with Secretary of the Interior Wilbur at Northwestern University on Oct. 17 had been cancelled. Last-minute changes by G. O. P. leaders substituted Henry J. Allen of Kansas, director-in-chief of the G. O. P. publicity forces.

President Hoover was to have introduced Wilbur by radio, while Gov. Roosevelt was to have introduced Ritchie from Albany.

Charges that President Hoover was instrumental in having Wilbur withdraw were denied at the White House. At the Department of the Interior it was said the Secretary was out of the city and would not return for 10 days.

1000 to Return to Work

New York, Oct. 14 (AP)—The American Radiator Co. will resume operations at its largest plant, at Bayonne, N. J., Monday, giving employment to 1000 to 1500.

Woman's Cats, Fish Fed While She Starves

New York, Oct. 14 (INS)—For 20 days three sleek cats in the apartment of Miss Martha Baston, a seamstress, were fed from a well-stocked can of specially prepared cat food.

A large quantity of special food also was on hand from which the goodfish were provided daily.

But in all that time Miss Baston, out of work for eight months, fasted. She lost 40 pounds during what she called her "diet," undertaken to cure a stomach ailment.

A city marshal found her when he forced his way in to evict her for non-payment of rent.

Her pride asserted itself when an attempt was made to remove her to a hospital as a pauper and she hysterically offsetted despite her weakness. Neighbors sent provisions to Miss Baston, but she refused to eat.

LABORITE SEIZED IN IRISH RIOTS

Belfast, Northern Ireland, Oct. 14 (AP)—Tom Mann, British left wing Labor leader who came here today presumably in connection with unemployment demonstrations or the past few days, was arrested this afternoon.

Even while he was on the way to the police station the streets were lined with thousands for the funeral procession of Samuel Baxter, one of those who was killed in the unemployment disorders.

Police said Mann had come here to organize a general strike. At the same time they expressed the belief that Communist influences were behind the troubles in Belfast.

Rail Unions Oppose 10 P. C. Wage Cut

London, Oct. 14 (AP)—Three major railway unions today rejected the proposal of four big railway groups to cut wages 10 per cent. The railway companies will submit the reduction proposal to the national wages board.

Kidnaping Won't Keep One Out of Court

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 14 (AP)—When it comes to alibis, Norman R. Collins, Wilmette banker, had one that defied Police Magistrate Harry H. Porter, but Mr. Porter got his $3 anyway.

"Where were you Monday?" asked the judge, curious to know why Collins failed to answer a traffic charge.

"Monday?" asked Collins. "Oh, yes, I was kidnaped. The kidnapers wanted $5000, but didn't get it."

"Three dollars," said the judge, "is all I want."

Collins paid.

OFFICER'S TRIP FREES DRIVER

Lawrence, Oct. 14—The departure of Patrolman Timothy Sullivan for Ireland without leave or notification of his superior officers may force the dropping of a charge of drunken driving against Harry Bernhard, 42, of Methuen, in district court here today.

Bernhard was arrested by the officer on the night of October 1 and arraigned for the first time October 3. The prosecutor asked the usual continuance to check highway records and the case was set for October 7. Patrolman Sullivan, not tied officials he was sick on that date and the case was continued to October 10.

On that date the officer did not appear and the case was ordered continued until today. Police meanwhile closed up on the missing officer and discovered he had sailed suddenly for Ireland last Saturday and was not expected to return for three months.

Public Safety Commr. Thomas F. Galvin said today that no action would be taken in the patrolman's case until he returned here.

East Boston Man Is Fined $25 in Tax Case

Luigi Casso, 25, of Chelsea st. East Boston, was sentenced to two months today in East Boston court on complaint of a one-time friend that he took $25 o "abata" a city tax bill. The complainant, Paul Riccardi of Everett st., East Boston, testified that Casso told him he was a "big shot" in City Hall. Casso appealed.

2000 Lose Homes in Nicaragua Storm

Managua, Nicaragua, Oct. 14 (AP)—Lashed by a tropical storm which caused heavy damage, Nicaragua surveyed its losses today as reports from many districts said swollen rivers had flooded towns, sweeping away bridges and drowning cattle. Two thousand persons are homeless.

Skipper Indicted in Rum Quarrel Killing

Providence, Oct. 14—A quarrel over change from a liquor purchase resulted today in an indictment for murder against Thomas Flynn, 62, coal barge captain, of Staten Island, N. Y. He is charged with shooting Stephen McGoldrick, 39, of Providence, father of four children, July 17.

B. & O. $3,000,000 Loan Authorized

Washington, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad today was authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission to borrow $3,000,000 from the Reconstruction Corporation to build 820 coal cars and 2500 freight cars and rebuild 145 locomotives.

ROXBURY BLAZE DRIVES OUT 40

Nearly 40 persons, in 11 families, were forced to flee today when fire broke out in the four-story apartment building of Sarah Finkelstein in Seaver st., Roxbury.

The blaze started in an unoccupied suite and was confined to that one and an adjoining one but heavy smoke rolled through the building and forced occupants of the other apartments out.

ARCHDUKE WEDS U. S. GIRL

New York, Oct. 14 (AP)—The New York American hears the Archduke Leopold of Austria, central figure in the Nazi-Fascist crisis, and the sensation of a year has been married to Mrs. Alicia Gibson Coburn, socially prominent here and in Canada. Verification was not obtainable.

Leopold arrived here July 31 from Europe and the ship's manifest showed that he described himself as divorced from his former wife, who was the Baroness Dagmar. When divorce proceedings were started last year in Venice, Leopold said he would marry Mrs. Coburn.

Mrs. Coburn became at the Archduke's request last week when he was in Tampa passed here. He spent some time there before a trial at which he was acquitted of grand larceny in connection with the sale of a $174,000 diamond necklace reported to have given the Empress Marie Louise.

Nazi Trooper Slain

Berlin, Oct. 14 (AP)—A report to the newspaper Tagebuch said today that Wilhelm Kampe, a Nazi storm trooper, had been found shot to death.

GOOD TIME TO BUY, SAYS DAY

The present market is described as a "consumers' paradise" by Charles W. Day, vice-president of the Economy Stores, in a statement given out today at the New England Food Show in Mechanics Building, where his company has a replica of an Economy store on display.

Day said prices of foodstuffs are now the lowest in 40 years, but that prices must be raised if the producer is to make any profit.

LEE SHUBERT TO PRESENT "CYNARA" TO EUROPEANS

Producer Is Also Negotiating With Australian Interests for Melbourne Premiere

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

It may have been merely a coincidence, or perhaps one of those strange omissions of the show business, but "Cynara," which comes to the Plymouth on Monday and which set up its own mark as good drama in London, has never been dangled before the world's great capitals except in England and the United States. All this to be corrected if you can believe Mr. Lee Shubert, who, despite the restrictions of hard times and shortened theatrical opportunity, has completed arrangements for early presentation of "Cynara" in Paris, Berlin, Vienna and, if matters break well, also in Australia.

• • •

According to Mr. Shubert, contracts for the several European productions were signed this week and negotiations are underway with the Williamson interests of Melbourne for the immediate staging of the piece in far away Australia. Having already scored heavily as a London hit of drama, it naturally may be wondered why this Harwood-Browne comedy had not already hopped the channel and spread itself over Continental Europe. Lee Shubert is the answer—he saw it first and convinced its producers that a Shubertian sponsorship was exactly the thing that would insure to the play a Lee Shubert world wide interest. He appears to have been the perfect Moses in a field of discordant drama. The first of the Continental production will be made in Berlin, and for this initial move Edward Scanlon, general stage director, is to leave New York today for the German capital.

As almost always is the case with stock companies, the return of an old friend generally has the kick of a well mixed cocktail. At any rate, the test will come at the Copley on Monday when Viola Roach will join Mr. E. E. Underhill's family of actor-folk for serious duty in "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary." Miss Roach needs little introduction to local playgoers, many of whom learned to enjoy her talents during the World War when she joined Henry Jewett's group at the Copley and toiled with it for four years. Later she shifted allegiance and cast her lot with the St. James stock company (now the Uptown) and remained three years. Miss Roach, following the rules of the game, tried Hollywood and made six pictures. We cannot bring any of them to mind, but that is small matter. She grew homesick for an audience and Mr Underhill made the journey back to the "legitimate" so easy that it could not be denied—nor even argued with

If any man who writes a column craves the wrath of the gods all he need do is to slip carelessly to leeward in the matter of chronological order or to astray on the nativity of one of his subjects. The following message tells its own cruel story

My dear Mr. Young:

For your personal information, Roy Cropper was born and raised in Jamaica Plain, not Roxbury, as your article stated in Tuesday's Evening American. All you writers seem to think that all talent comes out of Roxbury. I would suggest that you let the Boston public know that Roy Cropper comes from Jamaica Plain, not Roxbury.

(Signed) George Cohen

All right, Mr. Cohen—Jamaica Plain it is; but you'll have to admit that the neighborhoods are contiguous. Mr. Cropper, by the way, has made himself an intriguing Hank-Fox in the Hollis revival of "The Music Master."

Globe Trotter

Pictures of the great havoc wrought by a cloudburst near Bakersfield, Cal., are presented in the current issue of Hearst Metrotone News. A great wall of water swept through Tehachapi Pass, lifted a freight train from its tracks, killing 30 men, demolishing buildings and created a property loss of more than two million dollars. The locomotive, weighing 240 tons, was tossed into a creek as a match might have been, and heavily loaded freight cars piled up on top. There is a graphic description of the tragedy by The Globe Trotter

A group of American girl students at a school for music at Mondsee, Austria, were among others to greet the former Crown Prince of Germany on a recent visit to the school. Were they thrilled! Speaking to them in English, the Crown Prince asked how they liked Mondsee

"Oh, I like it very much," one bright maid replied, "but you ought to see Baltimore!"

Friederich Wilhelm joined in the hilarious laughter.

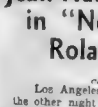
Jean Harlow to Be Starred Next in "Nora" by Anita Loos; Roland Brown to Direct

By HARRIET PARSONS

Copyright 1932 by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.—When "Red Dust" was previewed the other night the audience's attitude toward Jean Harlow was definitely friendly. Which was a tremendous relief to the harassed Jean.



Harriet Parsons

Jean's next will be "Nora," an original story by Anita Loos. It's the colorful tale of a gal who's always flying off the handle and whose wildness constantly gets her into jams. Although Nora has a hot temper, however, she's not malicious and the role will be a sympathetic one for Jean.

Story will have plenty of comedy and will be treated in a light vein until the finish where one of Nora's outbursts finally involves her in a tragedy. Miss Loos will write the adaptation and dialogue, which means there'll be many clever lines. Roland Brown will direct.

• • •

"Little Women"

Katherine Hepburn, whose film debut in "Bill of Divorcement" was little short of sensational, will have one of the principal roles in "Little Women." Suppose she will play Jo, who is the most colorful of the "Little Women" Anita Louise, as prophesied in this column (well—I can't be wrong all the time) will also be in the Alcott story. She'll play the role of Meg as a result of the fan mail which has poured in requesting that she be so cast. Dorothy Wilson is also up for a role. Fan mail also requests that story be kept in the 19th century. Wanda Tuchock and Charles Brackett are adapting and John Robertson will direct. And if I can't think of a director in whose hands the much-loved novel would be safer.

Studio Gossip

Lola Lane, Law Ayres and a pal were aching to play some bridge one night and after canvassing the town in vain for a fourth, finally called Central casting. Central, however, refused to oblige. L. O. P.'s friendly enemy, Benny Rubin writes me from New York to tell me he's been held over for a second week of personal appearances at the Capitol. Irene Bordoni will do five numbers besides introducing Dorothy Jordan, Irene Bordoni and Russ Colombo. Hardly seems enough. Benny Trem Carr has an on-the-level letter from an ambitious gal who wants to play the head in "Dark Beauty." Says she's a blonde but she'd be willing to dye her hair. When Buddy Rogers visited his family in Kansas on his way to the coast he took in a football game at his home university and stole all the thunder from the gridiron lads.

Deadline Data:

Universal has purchased a play by William Anthony McGuire called "Why Do We Live"—which, by a strange coincidence, is just the question I was asking myself this morning. Story will have musical interludes and undoubtedly is intended for Pons if she signs with Universal. M-G-M is after her, too. Universal is also trying to persuade Lee Tracy to postpone his European trip long enough to play the lead in "Private Jones." Gregory La Cava gets assignment to direct "Three Came Unarmed," which Katherine Hepburn and Joel McCrea will make for radio. Hepburn will do this before she goes into "Little Women."

• • •

Heard and Overheard

Johnny Howland will be in "The Inside" which is the new name for "Bad Boy," Cagney's first for Warners under the new sweetness and light arrangement. Studio insists that Carole Lombard will play the femme lead, but there's a persistent rumor around town that Carole turned it down. Jean Hersholt goes into "Crime of the Century" at Paramount and William Harrigan, now playing "Criminal at Large" on the New York stage, will probably also be signed. If Mort Millman's wife, Virginia, clicks in the two hits given her in "Old Heresy" and "Employees Entrance" Warners will put her under a long term contract. Ernst Lubitsch sails on the Europa, October 28, for London, Paris and Berlin.

Dishing It Out:

Jean Malin has had four film offers. Two studios were after him to play role of a male dressmaker (modiste if you want to get fancy) but he said "no" to both. Stanley Pascal is our old town and Ines Courtney is soon to be one of the town's newest brides. Latter is a beautiful blonde who was a Ziegfeld girl and a Hollywood hopeful. Ines is the daughter of Mrs. Courtney, who is the widow of Henry Courtney, who was the son of Mrs. Courtney, who was the daughter of Mrs. Courtney, who was

TORTURE CASE PLEA REFUSED

Jacksonville, Fla., Oct. 14 (INS)—Motion for a directed verdict of acquittal for Solomon Higginbotham, one of two defendants in the "sweatbox" torture - murder trial entered by defense attorney, Fuller Warren, was denied today without argument by Judge Gaynor.

Warren entered the motion as State's Attorney Charles M. Durrance concluded his rebuttal, after calling four witnesses to the stand.

Warren contended the state had failed to support murder charge against Higginbotham.

The other defendant, George W. Courson, was recalled to the stand as the state's first rebuttal witness. He insisted Maillefert committed suicide, after threatening to do so to avoid serving a nine year sentence for robbery.

Maillefert, naked, hanged by the neck, his feet and legs resting on the floor in heavy wood shackles of strangulation, in the dark inside sweatbox, the gang camp punishment chamber last Jan. 3.

Goes Democratic

Prof. F. W. Taussig, Harvard economist, who today declared he shall vote for Franklin D. Roosevelt for President. He cited various reasons, chief of which was that a change will benefit the country. (Bain News photo.)

TAUSSIG BACKS ROOSEVELT

Professor F. W. Taussig of Harvard economist, believes that a complete change in the makeup of the national government will be good for the country and will cast his vote next month for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"I shall vote for Governor Roosevelt," Taussig declared in an article in the Harvard Crimson today.

"I am in sympathy with his position on the country's main problems. Roosevelt is progressive, and at the same time, candid and careful in his declared program on prohibition, the railways, taxation, and honesty and efficiency in government.

"I believe it would be good for the country to have a complete change. No party should have a mortgage on power."

Prof. Taussig, in his statement, was joined by prominent professors at Harvard who will conduct their own presidential straw vote on Election Day.

Held as Tipsy Driver

Angus MacLeod of East 4th st., New York, was arrested today in Stony Brook Quincy, after his automobile was in collision with another machine. He is charged with drunkenness.

LAWRENCE BEAUTY DYING

Thelma Todd, Lawrence beauty, who rose to screen heights in a six-year film career that carried her from the schoolroom of her home city where she was a teacher, is near death at Los Angeles, a dispatch from that city revealed today. Miss Todd was apparently on the road to recovery from a major operation when peritonitis set in. Story on Page 3

Thelma Todd, Lawrence Star of Films, Is Near Death

Thelma Todd, who left Lawrence six years ago and won fame as a movie star, today was close to death from peritonitis, according to dispatches from Los Angeles, Cal.

The blonde beauty underwent a major operation recently and was believed on the road to recovery when the dreaded poison set in.

Since the start of her career that followed her selection as a prize beauty in a Swampscott beauty show, Miss Todd has brought untold fame to Lawrence.

Friends in that city kept in close touch on her condition through her mother, Mrs. John S. Todd, widow of the late John S. Todd, Lawrence alderman.

After she won the beauty contest of the Lawrence Elks at Swampscott, Miss Todd easily won high honor in a state-wide contest that gave her a chance in the movies with the Paramount Players School.

She entered with two other Massachusetts girls, Misses Dorothy Nourse and Jeanne Morgan.

Her first work was her as lead ing lady with Ed Wynn in "Rubber Heels." The next was her first-year contract in His Beach comedies, where she added the feminine charm that had been lacking in that type of comedy until that time.

Washington to Peru Radio Service Opens

Washington, Oct. 14 (INS)—Radio telephone service between Washington and Lima, Peru, will be opened today, when Secretary Stimson speaks to Senor Don Zavala Loayza, Peruvian foreign minister over the new hookup.

Senora Calles Near Death In Mexico City

Mexico City, Oct. 14 (AP)—The condition of Senora Leonora Llorente de Calles, who was operated on for a brain tumor in Boston last June, was reported grave today. She is the wife of former President Calles.

HALL INSISTS HE PAID WIFE

Hollywood, Cal., Oct. 14 (INS)—Asserting that the non-support charges brought by his wife in New Haven, Conn., were "preposterous and absurd," James Hall, movie actor, today said he had found it necessary to refer the matter to the courts.

Hall, arrested here, was released on his own recognizance, and Oct. 25 was set for a hearing on a fugitive warrant.

"We have been separated for seven years, and during that time I have contributed a minimum of $200 monthly towards her support, for which I have vouchers and receipts. Where there are no children I think that is sufficient," said Hall.

"The recent collapse of three months' continuous bookings has forced me to readjust my budget. As late as August of this year, however, my wife received $500 from me."

Sails to Europe

David E. Town, chairman of the executive board of the Hearst Corporations, as he appeared shortly before sailing on the S. S. Hamburg for a vacation tour of Europe.

Chrysler to Build New Plymouth "6"

Detroit, Oct. 14 (INS)—Walter P. Chrysler answered the decline in automobile sales, today with the announcement that his company is spending $20,000,000 in the introduction of a new car.

It will be a Plymouth, with six cylinders, supplanting the present four. It will sell at the lowest price ever quoted on a Chrysler product," he said, "but will rank as a full-sized automobile." Details of the model will be revealed later.

STYLE IS A FACTOR IN . . .

OSGOOD'S 58th Annual

Fall Opening

Osgood's Fall Opening is by no means an innovation. It is an annual custom established in 1875 in order that patrons of this old reliable store may renew friendly business relations, see at first hand the latest style trends and learn the proper arrangement of home appointments.

Three generations of satisfied customers of course know that our standing as an authority on "What the well-dressed home is wearing" is second to none . . . but we want first-comers to have a better understanding of what this leadership really means . . . so yours is a special invitation to this our 58th Annual Fall Opening.

Of this we are positive—"You'll be surprised to find how reasonably you can buy here just the furniture that will commend itself to your critical approval."

EX-WAITER FIGHTS FOR WOOD'S LEGACY

THIS IS LIFE

For Proof That Race Isn't to Fleet Look Into Night Schools

By Robert E. Rogers

R. E. ROGERS

THESE PRESENT WEEKS SEE the beginning of many and many experiment in adult and part-time education. The State University Extension offers a larger number of courses than ever before, in almost every conceivable subject useful and cultural. (Not—emphatically—that the cultural is not also the useful!) The public schools open their evening classes.

The great local universities, too, are offering evening courses under their most active and ambitious teachers. Private schools in many, many professional subjects—accounting, business and office training, the fine arts, speech and acting—usually have evening schools as well as day schools. The law has several schools for those who must work in the daytime. I am not sure but what the total of evening enrollments in all these fields of educational activity surpasses the regular registrations for day time education.

When Classes Dwindle Away

Now it is a commonplace to anyone who teaches or organizes in this field of, adult, part-time or evening education that the enrollment at the beginning of the school year in October is always a large one. In sum it is staggering. But they also know that as the year wears away, the attendance drops off, first slowly and imperceptibly, then more rapidly. Each renewal of registration, for many of these courses are organized in short units, is smaller than the one before. The Christmas-New Year period plays havoc with attendance and much of that attendance is never regained. At Lent it picks up a little. By the time spring comes there is often only a corporal's guard left, or a skeleton battalion in the large courses, holding on doggedly to the end of the term, the final examinations and the coveted, hard-won certificate.

To these, all honor and admiration and respect. They need nothing said to them. They carry their own encouragement and stimulus within them. They are self-starters—and self-completers. But possibly a word at the beginning might be helpful to the rest of them, the ones who drop out.

There are various reasons, of course. Some work too hard in the daytime and find they cannot physically keep up with the extra work. Some of them become ill and cannot catch up. Some of them are so interrupted in their work by home responsibilities that studying at night becomes a sheer impossibility. Some of them—the weak vessels—discover that they are losing so many parties and dances that the flesh simply gives in. But there is another kind of discouragement which undoubtedly persuades many to give up who otherwise would have gone through to the finish.

Race Not Always to the Fleet

It is, in short, the discouragement of slow progress; the discouragement of having to take short steps, to go short distances, when both ambition and impatience urge a sharp, quick sprint or a long, hard, fast cross country run. Progress, seems so slow! The lessons are so short when there is so much to be learned. The weeks stretch ahead, perhaps, into years.

Supposing you are working for a college degree. At the best, under full time conditions, the degree demands three or four years, four or five courses per year. Taken in snippets of short courses in the evening, courses offering only one semester hour's credit for two months, work or more, the prospect ahead seems endless.

But here is precisely where self encouragement is vitally necessary. I remember once reading a story written by a college undergraduate (who, incidentally, became later a great journalist), about two men swimming from a shipwreck to an island they knew to be so many miles away. It was in the tropics, the wind and water were warm. The young man was a strong swimmer, a racing champion. The older man was no physical marvel and out of practice. He swam very slowly and the young man could not hurry him up. Finally he lost patience and raced off into the darkness, impatient to arrive. The older man puffed slowly, doggedly, perforce taking his time. He arrived. The young man never showed up.

Experts in the difficult and highly human profession of retail credits insist that in paying bills the amount is often not so important as the regularity. If you owe $500 on a bill, which you know will take a long time to pay off, your credit will be far better if you pay off a little—what you can—at a time than if you wait for a big sum to come in and then, after months, pay it in full.

What Writers Have Done

We seldom stop to think what progress can be made by a slow and regular increment. I write in this column about 1000 words a day for five days a week. At the end of a year the sum total is in the neighborhood of 260,000 words—the equivalent of three full length volumes of 85,000 words each. If I had to do all this, or even one-third of all this, as one job, to be handed in complete at a certain time, I should flinch at the idea. I should postpone and delay, and then try to catch up by hurrying, by doubling or tripling my stint. I can, when put to it, write between 6000 and 7000 words a day without feeling strained. But I can't keep it up. By such a method of work my average is much lower than if I stuck to the daily average of 1000 words.

Jack London set himself rigidly to a daily stint of 1000 words and left behind him a large number of volumes. H. G. Wells must have averaged two volumes a year for nearly 40 years. Galsworthy's total of novels and plays since 1900 is staggering. So is Theodore Dreiser's wordage—I almost said footage—for the same period.

"Write me," says Browning, "Balzac's 50 volumes." Well, Balzac did it in less than 20 years, and he not only wrote but rewrote. Clyde Fitch wrote sixty plays in 20 years. Count the volumes of Dickens, Thackeray, Sir Walter Scott. Anthony Trollope trained himself to write 250 words every 15 minutes, for two or three hours in the morning before he went off to the job—and every morning.

And so I speak to the people who haven't much time and who must go slowly. They are eager, ambitious, impatient. Art is so long and time is so short! But time is long enough to do about everything you really want to do. Charles Darwin, that frail invalid, was able to work not more than one hour a day. He left behind him "The Origin of Species" and "The Descent of Man." He changed the entire outlook of the human race.

NATION LOOKING TO CLUBWOMEN, SAYS LEADER

State Federation Is Urged to Continue Service as 1500 Gather in Framingham

By NANCY BREWSTER

More than 1500 Bay State clubwomen gathered in Framingham today for the sessions of the fall meeting of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs. They marked the opening with a keynote of economy and sympathy, in keeping with the times.

With the fall of the gavel in the hands of the new president, Mrs Frank P. Bennett Jr. of Raleigh conducting her first official assembly as representative of approximately 125,000 clubwomen, were called to order. The meeting swings into action the activities of six affiliated organizations and 391 constituent club bodies.

Mrs. Bennett urged undivided cooperation for the year and called on the clubwomen for pressing service under the banner of organized womanhood.

WOMEN'S AID PRAISED

"This is an era when the help of women is needed, when woman can come to the front and exercise her greatest of talents —intuition," Mrs. Bennett said. "To the clubwomen of America does the nation look for support and assistance. To the clubwomen of Massachusetts does the Bay State look for active participation in the problems which so perilously affect us today.

"Bay State clubwomen have always been fine and splendid in their willingness to service. Let us continue our golden record of helpfulness."

Mrs. Bennett announced the slogan for the year would be:

"Simplicity and Economy."

The state president urged the clubwomen to find a way to visit the New England Conference, which is to be held at Whitefield, N. H., next week.

Reports of officers and committee comprised the morning session in review of the activities of the past few months.

CITY GREETS ASSEMBLY

Greetings from Framingham were brought to the clubwomen by Charles A. Potter, chairman of the selectmen. Mrs. Burr Jay Merriam, president of the Framingham Women's Clubs, the hostess club, welcomed the visiting delegates.

Mrs Selden E. James, director of the 12th district, brought the greetings of her members to the one-day convention. There was community singing directed by Mrs Mabel F Barstow. Mrs. George F. Schroeder, chairman of the division of music, presented the musical program.

WALLACE ASKS COURT FOR $50,000

Action Recalls Romantic Rise of Scotch Youth to High Woolen Mills Post

The story of the Boston waiter who became a millionaire was recalled today after a hearing in Essex County probate court, Salem.

William M Wallace appeared before Judge Dow and asked that the executors of the estate of William M Wood, late president of the American Woolen company, be ordered to pay him a legacy of $50,000 left him six years ago.

Wallace went to work as a waiter in the Algonquin Club after he came here from Scotland in 1911. Wood, who often dined at the club was impressed by Wallace's courtesy, and efficient service and offered him a position with the American Woolen company.

Wallace's rise was rapid, and in 1923 he was regarded as Wood's right-hand man, with charge of nearly every enterprise in Shawsheen Village, built by the American Woolen Co at Andover.

Since the death of Wood, Wallace has made his home in Brookline.

Judge Dow ordered counsel for Wallace and the Wood estate executors to file briefs with the court within a week.

O'CONNELL WINS BAR HONOR

Joseph F. O'Connell, former Congressman was elected a member of the American Bar Association executive committee today at its convention in Washington.

For many years he has been identified with the Association, serving as present as chairman of the committee on the "Firearms Act dealing with the war against machine guns and other arms in the hands of gangsters.

O'Connell is a graduate of Boston College, '93, and is a life member of Harvard Law School Association.

He served two terms in Congress from the old 10th district. He also served at the constitutional convention and recently announced his candidacy for mayor of Boston.

MERCURY DIVES TO 16 ON CAPE

Marking the coldest day of the fall, the temperature dropped to 16 degrees in parts of Cape Cod today, while killing frosts came in sections of Middlesex County, with a low of 23 in Lexington.

Boston's minimum of 38 degrees reached at 6 a. m., was also her coldest thus far.

For Middlesex County, today's frost came three weeks later than the date of the first killing frost last year.

Warned of the approaching cold, owners of cranberry bogs on the Cape flooded them last night and protected the berries. The brunt of the cold was taken on the surface of the water and skim-ice formed.

The weather man forecasts sunny skies for today and tomorrow, with warmer temperatures tomorrow.

7 ARRESTED IN AUTO THEFTS

A car-stripping ring roundup that may solve many car thefts a Boston, according to police, was expected today in the arrest of seven youths in Worcester.

Thousands of dollars' worth of alleged stolen accessories will be checked up by Boston investigators after the seven are arraigned on Worcester charges.

Five of the seven are charged with larceny. They are Edward Aubrey, 17; Joseph Brokewicz, 17, Oscar Leavitt, 18; Henry Rizza, 18, and a youth of juvenile age.

Albert Ellis, 19, is charged with receiving stolen property. Aaron Rudner, 19, is charged with taking an automobile without authority.

Curiously enough, the youths were trapped because of a report by Ellis that his machine had been taken from the street near his home.

According to police, it was found with Rudner at the wheel and a large number of accessories within.

Ellis was willing to forgive Rudner, but police decided to investigate and said they found most of the accessories were stolen

RECORD MARK IN REGISTRATION PREDICTED

Governor to Head Ticket in Opening of Three Weeks Drive

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Headed by Governor Joseph B. Ely, Democratic campaigners were today lightening up their belts for the start of an intensive three weeks' drive for victory in the November 8 election, with every assurance of a record registration in Democratic Boston, when the listing ends next Wednesday night.

On Monday night, the governor will take the stump at rallies in Taunton, Attleboro and North Attleboro, Straight-away on the last of the three communities selected for the opening of the governor's campaign figures prominently in the recent signature fraud scandals before the state ballot law commission

TICKET ON TOUR

It was "Attleboro Sam" Rushton, sportsman and alleged friend of Lieut.-Governor William A. Youngman, whom Patrick H. Doherty after his name had been removed from the ballot as an Independent prohibition repeal candidate for governor, charged was at the bottom of the split in the governor's wet vote.

On Tuesday night the governor and other speakers will address rallies in Marlboro, Natick, Framingham and Hudson. These speakers will include Gen. John E. Swift, candidate for lieutenant-governor, State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley, State Auditor Francis X. Hurley, Senator John P. Buckley and former Senator John F Buckley, candidates for attorney general and secretary of state, Democratic congressmen candidates for local office, Democratic mayors and well known stalwarts such as former Mayors John F. Fitzgerald and Andrew J. Peters

Mayor Curley will participate in the campaign in so far as his engagements will permit

NEW REGISTRATION MARK

Mrs Colin McDonald election commissioner, representing Mayor Curley at a Democratic organization meeting of women in Faneuil Hall, declared that in all her experience she could never before see so much interest in registration as is now being manifested

"This is more than a vital interest in the election," she stated "I personally believe that we are going to roll up a tremendous majority."

She pointed out that in the last four days of registration in 1928, 25,840 names were added to the voting list,

"If we do as well now as then we will have a total registration of 310,000, or a little more than 70,000 above the record registration of 1928," she said.

At the outset of the meeting, Dr Israel L. Doherty, presiding officer, scoffed at reports that women supporters of former Governor Smith were not going to vote for Roosevelt and Roosevelt women are not going to vote for Governor Ely

UNIFIED PARTY SOUGHT

In the words of Al Smith himself, she said "we are not here to please ourselves but to satisfy the nation."

Impassioned pleas for a united party were also made by Mrs. Carol Miller, national committee woman from Pennsylvania, and former U S. Comm. John A. Matthews of New Jersey. Mrs. Miller seconded the nomination of "Al" Smith in 1924 and in the 1928 campaign she made speeches in 13 states.

"All of us know why Smith was defeated," she said, "I hope to live to have my children live to see the day when religious freedom will become an actuality in this country of ours."

B. U. CO-EDS EAT APPLES TO GET THIN

BEULAH HUNT ELEANOR CATTLEY

On the advice of health experts, an apple vending machine was installed at the Boston University College of Liberal Arts bookstore. The apples don't last long and a little detective work revealed the reason. Beulah Hunt, of Atlantic, and Eleanor Cattley, of Melrose, were caught buying apples and they broke down and confessed. The co-eds found that an apple a day keeps them thin. (Staff Photo.)

GUY ADMITS NO REPORTS SENT TO M'KNIGHT

Bank Commissioner Attacked by Counsel for Directors of Closed Medford Trust Co.

Bank Commissioner Arthur Guy underwent intensive grilling today as the defense opened in his suit against the officers and directors of the Medford Trust Co. to hold them liable for losses

Commissioner Guy was forced to admit that no reports on the condition of the bank were sent to the directors from his office between December 31, 1930, when he became commissioner, to Oct. 7, 1931 when he took over the bank

His attention was called to an allegation in his suit that the directors failed to heed reports of the commissioner, and demand was made that he state what reports h meant

M'KNIGHT OFFER TO QUIT

"I don't remember," was his answer

Guy admitted that Edwin T. Mc Knight, who was president of the trust company, tendered his resignation to the bank commissioner early in September, 1931, about a month before the closing

Guy did not accept it. The offer was made in the commissioner's office during a conference over real estate loans made by the bank to Harley W. Blood, master, heading the evidence in the suit, ruled later that Guy had no authority to accept such a resignation.

The defendants in the commissioner's suit include McKnight, his wife, and 22 directors. Most of the grilling of Guy was by Atty. Charles S. Walkup, Jr., for Alden W Teel, a director

CLAIMS EVIDENCE LACKING

The bank commissioner shivered from cold several times while testifying and finally asked for his topcoat.

Walkup made the direct charge that some of the allegations in the suit were not made in good faith and not backed up by evidence.

Commissioner Guy admitted that he had the power to take action against any bank officer or director who was guilty of violating the law He admitted launching a no action against the Medford Trust officials.

He stated that even at the time of the closing he was not sure the bank was insolvent, as this depended on the real estate loans yet to be examined

ROAD OFFICIALS DELVE INTO TRAIN CRASH

All Members of Both Crews, Except Three Injured, Quizzed on the Berkeley St. Crash

Members of the crews of both trains involved in yesterday's crash near Berkeley st. bridge on the Boston & Albany Railroad, testified today at the South Station investigation into the collision

The only members of the crews who were absent were the three men injured. Engineer Wallace B. Smith, 56, of Mansfield st., Allston; Fireman Michael L. Madigan, 46, of Easton st., Allston, and Brakeman Eben W. Currie, 51, of Park rd., Ashland, all in the passenger train crew.

The names of Smith, whose foot was amputated, and Madigan, who suffered crushed legs and internal injuries, were still on the danger list in City Hospital today, while Currie was home with possible fractures of both legs and possible internal injuries

The testimony of these three men will be taken at the hospital and Currie's home, but others gave their testimony before General Supt. J. L. Truden of the Boston & Albany and Supt. J. B. Hammill in the latter's office

Enlarged photographs of the wreckage of the passenger and freight trains which collided on a switch crossover, plans and maps of the track and switch layouts and all records of train movements and signal operations in the vicinity at the time of the accident were produced as exhibits

Inspectors McConnell and Kirley of the State Department of Public Utilities sat in at the inquiry, which was private, but out of which a report is expected tonight or tomorrow.

DEERY GRILLING CALLED UNFAIR

Salem, Oct. 14—Vigorous protest was made today by S. Howard Donnell, counsel for President John A. Deery of the closed Salem Trust Co as the banker was grilled about the finances of the institution at hearing on the suit of Bank Commissioner Guy against officers and directors

"Mr. Deery was refused permission to look over the bank papers, yet here we are heaps of papers tossed at him with a demand for yes and no answers," said Donnell,

Atty. Neil Leonard representing the bank commissioner, showed Deery letters in which the Federal National Bank of Boston demanded payment from the Salem Trust Co. He was asked if he knew how many insurance policies were placed through the Naumkeag Insurance Co. on 117 real estate mortgages which the trust company held

"I don't know," said Deery

"What if I told you it was 100?" asked Atty. Leonard.

"It would be a——good thing," was the answer.

Beaten and Deserted Wives Snip Ties in Cambridge

Six wives won divorces in two uncontested sessions of probate court in Cambridge today.

Lewis Kuhnle, of Cambridge, was divorced by Mrs. Doris Kuhnle now of Belfast, Me because she testified, he used to hit her and knock her across beds and dress tats. She won custody of two children and will get alimony.

* * *

Mrs Lillian C Jowe, of Woburn divorced James R. Jowe after less than three years of married because he drank and beat he according to her story

* * *

Mrs Frances M. Park, of Newburn ave., Medford, won a decree and custody of two children because Alan B. Park left her in 1928 for another woman, according to her testimony

* * *

Daniel J Fitzgerald went to New York on "business" in January and failed to come back saving Mrs. Helen A Fitzgerald of Belmont, and their four children without money in a lightless rented house, she testified in granting a decree

* * *

He started to drink and on his birthday he pinched her on the jaw she declared

* * *

Mrs Mary I Hannon of Cambridge severed the ties that bound her to William E. Hannon of Somerville, by saying she had drank and made a practice of punching her she claimed

* * *

Hugh Hunter of Framingham cut down her allowance to such an extent that she had little to eat and lost so much weight her clothes wouldn't fit her, Olive Hunter said, in divorcing him for neglect.

North Bennet School Offers Trade Courses

An opportunity for the unemployed to learn a trade at nominal cost is offered by the North Bennet Street Industrial School, 39 North Bennet st., North End, according to announcement today by the president, Henry L. Shattuck

Young men and women desiring to take advantage of the chance may call at the school between 9 and 5 any week day, and they will be taken care of, up to the capacity limit

Plans for Jewish Drive Are Arranged

More than 200 members of the legal profession gathered at the Hotel Somerset, last night, at the third annual bench and bar dinner of the lawyers division of the Associated Jewish Philanthropies.

The meeting was one of 13 similar gatherings held all day yesterday for the purpose of concluding plans for the various trade and professional teams in the coming drive which will be launched Sunday night with a banquet, at the Hotel Statler

The speakers included Judge Henry T. Lummus, Judge Abraham E. Pinanski, Louis E. Kirstein president of the Philanthropies, Judge Lewis Goldberg, Judge Elijs Adlow, Judge Abraham K. Cohen Judge Jacob J. Kaplan, and Samuel Mandell, captain of the lawyers team, who presided

Wall St. Will Win, Says Mrs. Tilton

The presidential election will be won by "Wall Street," regardless of which candidate wins, Mrs. William Tilton, chairman of the Women's National Committee for Education Against Alcohol, told members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union today in Northampton

Both major parties have "fallen into a trap and the stage is all set to hurry out a repeal amendment," she said

CALL FOR WATER BRINGS FIRE

Imagine the embarrassment of Mrs. Charles Glidden today when the fire department clanged up to her front door at 114 Riverside st, Watertown

Mrs. Glidden had called for the water department. She didn't even call her husband, Patrolman Glidden.

In the excitement, a telephone operator called the fire department instead of the water department and everything was mixed

"Go back, I don't want you!" shouted Mrs. Glidden as the astonished firemen. They went back and called the water department

It all centered around a row in the Glidden cellar

But the unsung hero of it all was William Donald son-in-law of the Gliddens. William held the pipe joint together while all the departments were arriving and departing

Postal Officials Act to Balk Sweepstakes

Additional fraud orders have been issued by the postoffice authorities against the Irish Free State lottery tickets being circulated through the mails

"I left the party of which I always have been a member to vote for Gov. Smith four years ago

2186 MORE PUT ON VOTING LIST

New voters to the number of 2186 registered in Boston yesterday, bringing the total number now on the Lists up to 283,227

This number compares favorably with figures for a similar period in 1928 when nearly 300,000 voters were registered, but is still far behind the figures needed to reach the 325,000 desired this year

With registration closing next Wednesday, the drive has been intensified in order to reach that total

The heaviest registration is looked for next week, when officials expect a last minute rush

Former City Councillor Robert C. Wilmot has sent notices to 1900 unregistered Republicans in Ward 17, Dorchester, urging them to register

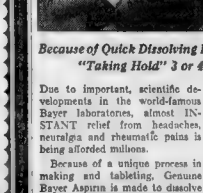
Quicker Relief For Headaches



Because of Quick Dissolving Property BAYER ASPIRIN Starts "Taking Hold" 3 or 4 Minutes After Taking

Due to important, scientific developments in the world-famous Bayer laboratories, almost INSTANT relief from headaches, neuralgia and rheumatic pains is being afforded millions.

Because of a unique process in making and tableting, Genuine Bayer Aspirin is made to dissolve almost INSTANTLY in the stomach. Hence it starts to work almost instantly. And thus "takes hold" of the average pain or headache in as little as three or four minutes after taking. The fastest, safe relief, it is said, ever known for pain.

Remember, it is Genuine Bayer Aspirin which provides this unique, quick-acting property. So be sure you get the Real Article—GENUINE BAYER Aspirin when you buy. Naturally you want the fastest, possible relief—and that's the way to get it.

To identify the genuine, see that any box or bottle of aspirin you buy is clearly marked "Genuine Bayer Aspirin." And that any tablet you take is stamped clearly with the name "Bayer" in the form of a cross. Remember—Genuine Bayer Aspirin cannot harm the heart.

NO TABLETS ARE GENUINE BAYER ASPIRIN WITHOUT THIS CROSS

DID WE HAVE AN ELEPHANT TIME? It was Columbus Day evening . . . as well as the second anniversary of our plunging into the matrimonial soup . . . a day indeed of explorings and discoveries . . . !

All feet tripped merrily to the beautiful Egyptian Room of the Hotel Brunswick . . . where society's fairest gathered to applaud three of their sister-buds who were making their radio debut . . . Nancy Whitman, Emma Kidder and Jean Hall.

And were they the NUTS? It was one grand, glorious and crowded success . . . Beauties of Beacon Hill swaying in the arms of handsome swains . . . Stars of the stage dancing to the strains of the HOT CHA music . . . Everyone dizzy with delight at the glamorous picture and enjoying it hugely . . .

Jewels and Soft Furs

THE WONDERFUL lighting arrangement so flattering to feminine frailities . . . The golden ceiling shedding a suffused glow over everything and turning all things mundane into that precious metal . . .

Fair and Frillies drifting by in their sumptuous silks and velveta enhanced by jewels and soft furs . . . as their proud escorts led them out onto the shining dance floor . . . which was so slippery we had to become a moocher in spits of ourselves . . . that is, we just SLITHERED about . . .

The deep-voiced Nancy has always been a headliner with us and now we can begin to get ENTHUSIASTIC . . . she was an instant HIT with the crowd. What a personality that girl HAS!

Emma Kidder . . . enough alike are they to be sisters . . . hotted up her numbers in good old Broadway style . . . she surprised us with the pep and volume of her voice . . ! These debs were GOOD!

The third member of the trio, Jean Hall, came through with flying colors . . . her voice is big and warm, vibrating with feeling . . . it filled the entire room and received tremendous applause . . .

Dancing Under Softened Lights

FLOCKS OF THEIR FRIENDS trooped in to give them a flying start to fame . . . under the softened lights we glimpsed Elizabeth and Jane Wheeler gliding by in the throes of romance . . .

Gorgeous Priscilla Hoyt of the red hair and rose-petal skin danced in a soft green suedy-crepe . . . too artistic for words!

Eleo Stephenson was caught in the meshes of silver sequins and a tall, blonde cavalier . . .

Jean Read appeared very roguish in the little Lord Fauntleroy black velvet and cream lace collar . . . she was with Connie Holmes, a charmng brunette, and two Harvard youths . . .

Mrs. Henry Parsons King, Jr., in silk blouse and suit dined with Mr. King . . . it must have been Mr. King! You remember she was president of the Vincent Club two years ago and was no duobt thinking of the coming show as she listened.

A Rainbow for Bridal Couple

ALL OF WHICH ALMOST made us forget the events of the afternoon which included the Bartow-Dean nuptials in Cobasset . . .

If omens are signficant then they will be a happy couple . . . immediately after the ceremony as they emerged from the church the rain stopped and a luminous rainbow arched the heavens . . . only the pot of gold was lacking and James can supply that . . .

Mrs. Dean, the bridegroom's mother, and Mrs. William C. Cox were the most smartly gowned of the entire wedding party, we hear . . . Mrs. Dean wore bottle green cloth trimmed with caracul and Mrs. Cox a black caped dress trimmed with black caracul . . .

Mrs. John Coolidge (Helen Seymour) was there . . . have you heard that she is in the landscape architecture business as a post-graduate course to her Lowthorpe school days . . . all of which helps make marriage possible these days . . .

Mrs. Jack Bishop attended with her mother and father . . . she has been abroad . . . her tan costume was most fetching.

The fry-pan hat was the mode . . . Mrs. Lewis Bell's was red and her mother, Mrs. William H. Brown, sported a brown one . . .

Mary McElwain appeared in a brown dress and a blue hat . . . entirely Mary's own idea . . .

Weren't you surprised to read in the morning papers about cousin Donald McElwain's approaching marriage to Miss Charlotte Smith of Heath st., Chestnut Hill? Is he lucky? She is the sweetest person imaginable and lovely to look at . . . a great friend of Donald's sister, Helen's . . . The wedding is Tuesday, so the papers have it, and they are sailing abroad immediately . . .

Which reminds us that the former Mrs. Donald McElwain, now Mrs. Sam Peabody, is living a very quiet life in Westwood . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Motley have returned from a late stay at Nahant and have opened their house in Concord . . . Their eldest son, Edward, Jr., is a freshman at Harvard . . . debs please note . . . He spent the summer abroad on his vacation instead of at the shore with his parents, after his graduation from Groton in June.

HALLOWELL-McKEY CEREMONY IN HOME

Bride to Wear Blue Satin, Old Family Lace

At 7 15 o'clock this evening at the home, 45 Ledges rd., Newton Center, of her parents, Miss Mary Frances McKey will be married to Mr. James Mott Hallowell, the son of Mrs. James Mott Hallowell of Reservoir ave., Chestnut Hill, and the late Mr. Hallowell. The ceremony will be performed by Dr. Albert C. Dieffenbach, and the bride will be given away by her father.

Sister as Maid

The bride will appear down a staircase decorated with smilax and laurel to the spacious reception room decorated with autumn blooms in blue shades, gowned in a wedding costume of ice blue satin, and wearing a tulle cap and veil covered with old family lace She will carry a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley

Miss Dorothy McKey, the bride's sister, will attend her as the maid of honor, and has selected a velvet gown in turquoise blue. She will carry a sheaf of tailisman roses and larkspur, while little Miss Janet McKey, the bride's younger sister, will serve as her flower girl in crepe dress of turquoise blue ruffled to the ground, and will carry an old-fashioned bouquet of autumn flowers.

Mrs. McKey has chosen a velvet gown also in turquoise blue and will wear a corsage of talisman roses and larkspur, and her guest of honor, Miss Hallowell will wear fashionable velvet in a burgundy shade

Among Hostesses

Mr. Benjamin H. Hallowell, the bridegroom's brother, who entered Harvard this fall, is assisting as best man. There will be no other attendants. A large and distinguished group of relatives will be present, and after the ceremony the wedding party and guests will go over to the Brae Burn Country Club where a reception and dance is to take pace at 8:30 p. m.

Many luncheons and showers have preceded this important event for which Mrs. J. G. Richard Herkness, the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Loader and Miss. Mary Ives have been hostesses

Miss Richmond to Make Bow

A dance is being given tonight at the Milton Club, where many members of Boston's society will be presented to Miss Helen Richmond, the daughter of Mr and Mrs. Carlton Richmond, of 273 Adams st., Milton.

This event is one of the important affairs on the debutante calender for the month and a large group of ushers have been invited to assist.

Miss Richmond will receive her guests in a dainty costume of sea-shell velvet while her mother has chosen a black velvet gown for the occasion.

Chatty Notes of Social Circles

ONE OF THE FASHIONABLE tea dances is the occasion this afternoon of the presentation of Miss Blanche B. Marshall, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Marshall (Josephine Lee) of Rockwood at., Jamaica Plain. The event takes place at the home of her parents, and many members of the family and friends of the debutante will be attending

White's were the following: Ex-Governor Baxter, of Maine; Mrs. Philip Gardner, Mrs. George Keyes, Mrs. J. S. Ames, Mrs. H. D. Leland, Mrs. Alvin B. Hathaway, Mr. C. Elliot, Mrs. George Fisher and many others. There is to be a lecture on the fourth floor today at 2 30 p m. followed by a tea when Dr. Armand H. Hammer will describe his thrilling experiences while saving these art treasures from destruction immediately after the revolution.

MRS. RUSSELL ROBB AND Mr. Sherman Hoar, have set off on a motoring trip up to Woodstock, Vt., this week to visit friends for a few days.

MRS. HAMILTON SCHIEFFELIN of New York, and Mrs Theodore Smith, have been house guests with Miss Lilly Hurd and Mrs. Frances Fowker, both of Concord.

THREE OF SOCIETY'S FAIREST IN RADIO DEBUT

EMMA KIDDER NANCY WHITMAN JEAN HALL

MISS EMMA KIDDER, Miss Nancy Whitman and Miss Jean Hall snapped as they made their Boston radio debut from the Egyptian room of the Hotel Brunswick this week. Many debutantes, post-debs and other members of society gathered to see their favorites at the mike and the event was turned into a gala social success. (Staff photo.)

Books---And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

It is a fascinating book which Russel Crouse has written about unsolved murder mysteries in New York. He calls his volume "Murder Won't Out" (Doubleday, Doran), and the weird tales he retells bring back a picture of that smaller city, when gaslight burned in basements far downtown and the sad daughters of joy paraded our streets and young blades drank in cafes and love stories were secretly enacted in those thoroughfares in the lower section of our city. He has an astonishing gift for remoulding the past. When it comes to murders in our own time, many of which we remember well, we see how authentic is his reporting.

The Etwell case, for instance, occurred within the memory of us all. It remains one of the great and mysterious murders of our time.

* * *

Rocked the Town

Then one recalls the Molyneaux affair, when Mrs. Adams was inadvertently poisoned—a fearsome affair. Events which rocked and shocked the town in 1898 and brought to light several minor scandals that set tongues energetically wagging.

There were no tabloids then to seize upon such cases; but our more sedate press was not averse to making the most of its opportunities. We were treated to tidbits of news that it would be hard to match even now. Human nature remains the same in every era.

Mr. Crouse holds, and rightly, that we take the old saying, "Murder will out," for granted. Yet here is a record of a round dozen assassinations which prove the exact reverse. The police worked hard to bring the guilty to justice; but in vain. One great detective died of a broken heart, it is said, in the famous Nathan murder. His one chance to prove his perspicacity—and he failed.

The curious part of old Nathan's taking off, on West Twenty-third st., then a fashionable residential thoroughfare, was that the unfound murderer left the bloody imprint of his hand on the wall. What evidence that would have been today, with all we know of fingerprints! Then—in 1870—the science was unknown; and thus the doer of the deed was never captured

* * *

Unable to Escape

In many instances Mr. Crouse shows what strange fate pursued those who had been suspected. It is as if a Nemesis brooded over them. They could get away from the minions of the law, but they could not escape from themselves

Molyneaux, for example, went insane. He was tried twice, and, as Alexander Woollcott observes in his foreword, there was little doubt as to his guilt. Yet he could not be convicted. "Conscience does make cowards of us all." His peculiar reactions, long after he had spent months in the death house at Sing Sing and had written a gruesome little book called "The Room With the Little Door," startled what friends he had left. He was committed to an asylum, and three years later died of general paralysis

The Dot King murder of 1920 involved names listed in the Social Register, and we were all astutter over the spicy details. Did a thief really kill this glamorous girl or was she the victim of an old admirer? We never found out; and the chances are that we never shall find out.

* * *

Much Drama

The last mystery, never unravelled, is that of Starr Faithful, the girl with the beautiful name who disappeared as recently as 1931. Here was the perfect mystery, with a modern setting, a revelation of the life of a flapper—a young life led under the regime of prohibition

As sordid a tale as could possibly be unfolded in our time.

Mystery writers of the future will doubtless use many of these true stories as the basis of their books. Why draw upon the imagination when thus in life, with its seething currents, these are at hand? There is more drama in his book than Sherlock Holmes could ever have invented.

One hopes that Mr. Crouse, at some future time, will retell the stories of other sensational murders, like that of Dr. Carman down on Long Island, and the Hall-Mills case over in New Jersey. The small-town mystery is as engrossing as that of the great metropolis. As the late Mary Stewart Cutting wrote in one of her short stories years ago, "There is no community too small to be without its great tragedy"

Many Subjects

The inimitable Skippy, of Percy Crosby, is growing up. We all know the pictures of him and his delightful adventures with his young friends. One could say, if one wished to mix a metaphor, that he has the kid vernacular at his fingers' ends.

Now he comes to us in a small volume called "Skippy Rambles," and Putnam is the publisher. We find him discussing every conceivable subject from beer to art galleries, from election talk to selling soap, from ghosts to bees, from earth, stars and everything to soup and the only real church. An amazing child, this.

Skippy is an institution. He is like the Castoria that children used to cry for. If he should be missing some morning from your daily paper there would be a Niagara of tears throughout the country. He romps through this troubled world like a happy spirit, and we all owe a debt to his creator, Mr. Crosby, which we shall never be able to pay

Latest Notes of the Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

WHAT MAKES US BEAUTIFUL? We are all more or less interested in this absorbing question because after all the Greeks had the right idea. What was beautiful, was good. This is going to evince a laugh, I feel quite sure, because there are going to be some cynics whose eyes rove this printed page who will say, "O Yeah"! But, nevertheless, I hold to my contention that there is a definite goodness about beauty. Beauty can accomplish so much—of course, it can and does occasionally achieve some things that we could wish often were otherwise, but for the most part beauty is all powerful, especially beauty in a woman.

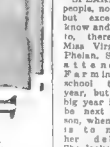
Naturally all women cannot develop the same graces of mind and body, but in each personality there lurks like hope in Pandora's box, a potential charm. "What is my bit of magic" Milady should say to herself. "Have I the carriage of beauty?" Perhaps that is what she should develop. "Have I the eyes of beauty?" Then let Milady emphasize them till the onlookers forget the other features

For example, one lady who has achieved great and lasting beauty who is always well gowned and tailored and is a delight to the eye is, Mrs. Swan Hartwell of Temple st., West Newton. She has beautiful brown eyes, clear, lovely skin and brown hair that grows enchantingly about her face. She has an alluring manner of talking that curls the corners of her mouth in a truly fascinating manner. And there is always a haunting suggestion of a smile about her face. She looks exceedingly well this fall in her dark tweed suit with a jaunty little hat just showing enough of her hair to be most enchanting.

* * *

Blue Velvet Frock

SPEAKING OF ATTRACTIVE people, not only lovely to look at but exceedingly charming to know and talk to, there is Miss Virginia Phelan. She is attending Farmington school this year, but her big year is to be next season, when she is to make her debut. She looked so charming not long ago in a Yale blue velvet afternoon frock trimmed with narrow white fox fur and having a wide cape effect which was most becoming, to her. She is a gracious young person with a great deal of charm. She has dark hair and hazel eyes that have a lovely twinkle in them and also an intriguing and altogether delightful smile.



* * *

Black Tea Gown

ANOTHER VERY ATTRACTIVE young butterfly who is fluttering in the golden flame of social gaiety with much success is Miss Elizabeth Reece of Boston. She looks stunning in her well fitted black tea gown with the striking contrast of full white sleeves, and a black hat put on at the prevalent and attractive angle actually of the gay 90s, but my, what a lot they have learned since those days. Not only about ribbons and laces and wee hats that set off their pretty faces to advantage, but these young ladies of the social world today have so much poise and savoir faire.

* * *

Brown Ensemble

MISS ANNE TORBERT, WHO is also a debutante this year and who is having a gay and festive time, looked exceedingly well the other day at a debutante gathering to which she wore an attractive brown ensemble. Her hat was brown felt with a becomingly tilted brim and she wore a soft brown fur about her neck. The little touch of flowers on the shoulder is always so attractive. Sometimes the deb wears a gardenia, sometimes an orchid and often a spray of roses with a touch of starflower

JUST LIKE A WOMAN

Feminine Interests In the Day's News

By Marguerite Marshall

When Selfish Mother Blocks Her Son's Marriage, What Is the Girl to Do?

"WHAT'S a girl to do if she has the bad luck to be married —or even engaged—to a mother's boy?" demands a young woman who signs herself "Loribelle."

"I wish you'd write something about this problem," she continues. "I have been engaged for 11 years to a man who is now 39, and the only drawback is his selfish mother, who tells people that her son will never marry as long as she lives. Three years ago he came back to me after a quarrel and promised that we would be married within that year. Now he says that he is not ready yet and expects me to wait until his mother passes on.'

"He admits that she gets on his nerves. He loves me, I know. Yet he will make no change. She has four other children who are married and have grown families and can easily care for her. My sweetheart could contribute to her support, but he is the young red and she feels he is her boy and should not leave her. What would you advise me to do?"

ONE SENSIBLE GIRL

You and other girls—too many of them are in your shoes—will think the advice drastic, but we see only one sensible course for you. Tell the young man to choose between living his own life and living his mother's life, or else—! If, in short, he persists in sacrificing not only himself but you to his mother's unwarranted demands, let him go—and be thankful the break comes now instead of after marriage.

Mothers must not accuse us of attacking the beautiful bond between mother and son. It IS beautiful—but only when it is a BOND and not a BONDAGE.

No mother need look farther than her Bible to find that her son is upheld in leaving father and mother for the sake of his wife, cleaving only unto her. No mother-in-law, no family-in-law has any right to make life wretched for the girls their sons love and wed.

WARNING TO HIM

Never was the lesson driven home more effectively than in that simplest yet most human play written by a woman for the New York stage—Rose Franken's "Another Language." Here is a drama "just like a woman" in characterization and in motive.

As we watched it in utter fascination, we hoped that every engaged girl entered "another language" when the young man asks, "What would you like to see tonight?"

It is a wise and witty warning to him to keep his married life in his own name — not in the name of his family. In this play the Hallam family—and especially the mother-in-law—medles continuously with all the luckless women who marry the Hallam sons.

Stella, wife of Vickie, the youngest, is the worst sufferer. Goaded beyond endurance, she turns at last on her husband's mother and all her other interfering in-laws, with a cry which must find an echo in many a young wife's heart:

"You're all so sure of yourselves! You're trying to mould life to fit your own, and it's wrong! You mustn't! You've got to let me alone—you've got to let Vickie and me keep our marriage the way it started out —it's the only thing that'll save us."

It's the only thing that saves any young couple's happiness—the elimination of in-law interference. There are times when we think of a friend of ours had the right idea—he vowed he'd marry an orphan and then burn down the asylum!

"Disease of Rich Man" Rapidly Vanishing

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

TO THE VICTIM, gout is a terrible affliction. To the student of medicine, it is one of the most interesting of our many diseases. This ailment, seldom heard of today, used to be looked upon as a "rich man's disease" and was common in England. It has greatly decreased over there, and is rare in this country.

Dr. Copeland

Faulty nutrition is really the chief factor in gout. Since the causes of malnutrition are more clearly understood, we know how to deal with that disorder, and many disabilities, including gout, have disappeared.

Gout really is a constitutional disturbance due to an excessive amount of uric acid in the blood, and those who show a tendency to this disease are called "gouty."

When such persons eat food rich in certain substances called "purins" they show "gouty inflections." Then deposits of uric acid form in the joints, the big toe being the one most commonly affected.

Though chronic gout is often difficult to cure, most cases respond readily to our present day treatment. The purpose of the treatment is the reduction of uric acid, and to this end foods which form uric acid, particularly those containing purins, must be omitted from the diet. Meats and meat extractives, such as bouillon and beef extracts, sweetbreads, liver, kidneys and brains are detrimental to the welfare of the gouty individual.

Alkaline and certain other mineral waters have long been considered useful in the treatment of this disease. Constipation and other digestive disorders must be corrected before a cure can be expected. Attention to the general body hygiene is important. Moderate eating at regular hours with regular hours of sleep, exercise, daily bathing, fresh air and sunlight, are a few of the daily requirements for the sufferer from gout.

Health Queries

I McD. Q—I am troubled with large red rings coming on different parts of my body, they itch and turn black and blue while disappearing. Can you tell me what causes this?

A—You should have a personal medical examination so that definite advice can be given. Do not neglect this.

R. A. P. Q—I have been bothered with a swollen leg which at times is so badly inflamed it is impossible to walk. The inflammation has now reached the knee and turns to a running sore. What would you advise?

A—I would suggest that you consult a skin specialist.

The Marry-Go-Round

The Double-Track Life

By HELEN ROWLAND

ISN'T IT WONDERFUL to be a free modern woman! Isn't it glorious to be able to have a career and a home at the same time? To be able to write or paint or sing for a living? To do something that lifts you above the sordid routine and liberates the soul and—

(Oh, excuse me! Just a moment. The man has brought the rugs from storage. And here's the window-cleaner waiting to know where to begin.)

Helen Rowland

• • •

There, now! As I was saying, isn't it wonderful to have what you fondly think of as "a literary gift" (and your friends sweetly describe as "a talent for wise-cracking")—and all that?

• • •

Isn't an art or a profession a glorious thing for a woman? What a zest it lends to life! How it emancipates the spirit from the petty round of details! Poor grandmother! What a dull life she must have led—

(Oh, wait! There goes the telephone! The decorator wants to know what color scheme the new bathroom is to have. And won't I put-lease decide whether the guest room is to be mulberry or ashes-of-rose. And ARE the fixtures in the living room to be Italian—or what?)

• • •

Let me see. Where WAS I? Oh, yes! What a deadly, innocuous, stagnating existence the mid-Victorian woman must have led. With nothing to think of but food and clothes—and dust on the furniture! It was like being a bunch of wax flowers under glass!

• • •

But the modern woman with a CAREER! How gracefully and easily she escapes all the nagging, commonplace domestic worries. How her mind and thoughts rise above the material things of —

(Good heavens! There are the men to do the living room floor —and all that furniture will have to be moved and piled into the dining room. Ye gods!)

• • •

Oh, well, anyway, isn't it just GRAND to be a modern woman, and have both a home and a profession? But there are times when I envy grandmother her CINCH! Perhaps a one-track life wasn't so bad after all!

She Should 'Smile and Speak'

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

A boy of 21 lived two doors from me. I'm 17. Then he moved around the corner. In the meantime someone told him a lot of lies on us, but his folks didn't believe those tales. This boy let me wear his ring, but his mother asked me to give it to her and I did. Since then he hasn't been around, but he passes the house lots of times in his car, goes very slowly, and looks very hard. What would you do?

MOLLIE.

Dear Mollie: I'd give him my most charming smile and speak to him. There's no reason in the world you two should be "mad" with each other because someone told stories, and the boy acted on impulse. When his mother asked for the ring, you were sensible to return it. Make up by all means.

Crisp Fritters Perfect for Autumn

By MARTHA LEE

From Martha Lee Friday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

WHAT DO YOU do with your time? If you are clever you will fritter some of it away, especially at meal time. Crisp golden fritters, deep-fried to a deliciousness, are the perfect food for Autumn, and while lending a note of quiet elegance to your meal, still they manage to work wonders with a reduced budget.

First, you must have a really good fritter batter (euphonious word), one that comes out right every time. Nine out of ten expert cooks use this one:

Standard Fritter Batter

2 cups flour
2 tsps. baking powder
1 tsp. sugar
1¼ cups milk
3 tbsps. melted shortening
2 egg whites
½ tsp. salt

Sift flour with baking powder, sugar, salt. Add melted shortening to milk. Beat egg whites stiff but not dry; add milk and oil to sifted flour mixture. Beat well, add beaten egg whites.

While the batter is standing, get your kettle ready for the deep-frying. Use an iron or aluminum kettle, but use a frying basket only if you wish. Heat your cooking oil or fat until very hot. If you have a thermometer, use it; if not, toss a cube of bread into the hot oil, and the time it takes to brown will show the approximate heat. Fritters usually require a temperature of 375 deg. F., or hot enough to brown a piece of bread in 60 seconds.

You previously will have prepared your fruit or vegetable for the frying (we trust). When all is ready dip the food to be fried into the batter, covering each piece well. Fry until brown, drain on brown paper. Some cooks like to dip the vegetables in flour and the fruit in sugar before putting into the batter.

The standard batter recipe will do for almost any kind of fritter but is especially good for the meat, fish and vegetable varieties. For the fruit fritters, a slightly different batter is used.

Fruit Fritter Batter

1 cup flour
2 eggs
1-3 tsp. salt
½ tsp. sugar
1 tbsp. melted fat
3 tbsps. lemon juice
Milk or water.

Sift the flour and salt together. Beat eggs, add the melted fat and lemon juice; add flour. Mix, then add enough water or milk to make a thin batter (usually ½ to 2-3 cup). Beat until smooth and use.

Tints of Bronze Popular for Winter

By PARIS BUREAU

PARIS, Oct. 14—Bronze is one of the new colors that Paris prophesies for big winter successes. Or rather, it is a whole series of colors that begin with brownish-greens and go through a whole gamut of changes to greenish-browns.

Bronze kid shoes are shown in several fashionable dress-making establishments as the correct evening slippers to go with dresses of all colors and types.

Chantal makes a bronze-green coat of broadcloth, with a beige fox collar. The fur collar is put on in a new way—incrusted around the shoulders rather than attached to the collar.

Two bags are shown with the coat—both beige to match the fur collar. The envelope, from Maggy-Rouff, is of box-calf, with a metallic gold corner protecting the point of the flap. The pouch bag, in the new smaller size, has a concealed metal frame.

Daily True Story

The 'Other Girl' Proves a Winner

JOE KNOWLTON had quarrelled with his girl. There's nothing unusual about that, naturally, for thousands of other men have quarrelled with their sweethearts. But that didn't make it any easier for Joe. Especially as it happened on the eve of the moonlight sail down the river on which he was to have gone with Thelma.

And, to make it worse, he learned that Thelma was going with Phil Harris who, to Joe, was a little less than nothing.

"I'll show her," he said to himself when he heard it. But just how he was going to "show her" Joe didn't know. He considered possible means but rejected them all as unworkable. Finally, when he just couldn't think about it any longer, he opened his newspaper and began to read.

The next evening, when the river steamer began its five-hour trip, Joe saw Thelma sitting on the upper deck with Phil Harris. He made no effort to avoid her. In fact, he passed so close to her that it was impossible for her to ignore him.

A NATURAL BEAUTY

"Hello, Thelma," he said. He even spoke cordially to Harris. Then he introduced his companion—and what a companion. She was by far the prettiest girl on the boat, a natural beauty. Even Harris was a little goggle-eyed as he acknowledged his introduction to Miss Martin.

Joe was certain he heard Thelma give a little "sniff" of disdain and caught her looking at him as if to say, "You think you can make me jealous by bringing this girl, don't you? But Joe realized what Thelma was thinking he gave no indication of it.

He and Miss Martin drew up chairs near those of Thelma and Harris and when the band began playing on the deck below Joe turned, not to Miss Martin, but to Thelma. "May I have this dance?" he asked.

Thelma was so surprised that she assented before she realized that she and Joe were theoretically not speaking to each other. They had hardly made one turn of the dance floor before they saw Harris and Miss Martin dancing together.

PHIL LEAVES THELMA

At the end of the first dance Thelma looked for Harris, but he didn't appear.

"I'm tired," she said to Joe. "Let's go out on deck." She couldn't, she decided, just walk off and leave him there as her own partner had disappeared.

They walked about the deck and soon found Harris and Miss Martin seated in chairs in a dim corner.

"We thought we'd just sit this one out," Harris explained, somewhat lamely.

"Why, surely," Thelma answered. She turned away. Joe followed her. "How about another dance?" he asked.

"Oh, all right," she answered. She couldn't go off and mope by herself. She decided one thing, however. Never again would she go out with Phil Harris. The idea!—running off and leaving her for another girl. She wished that she and Joe hadn't quarreled. She was wretched.

"What's the matter?" asked Joe when he had finished the dance and again gone on deck.

"Nothing," Thelma answered.

Joe reached over and took her hand. She didn't draw it away.

"You don't care anything for that fellow, do you?" he asked.

Thelma shook her head. Joe leaned closer.

"Come on," he said. "Don't let's fight any more. I've even forgotten what it was all about."

Thelma was about to yield and then she suddenly remembered. She drew her hand away.

"How about Miss Martin?" she said. "You didn't seem to have much trouble in finding somebody else."

Joe laughed. "Oh, Harris will take her home," he said. "And I'll probably never see her again. Nor will he, either."

JOE EXPLAINS

"How do you know he'll take her home?" asked Thelma.

"She's already asked him to," said Joe. "He's probably sitting there now thinking what a lady-killer he is. Boy, is he due for a bad fall."

"What in the world are you talking about?" asked Thelma.

Again Joe laughed. "Just using the old head," he said. "If I had brought her along to make you jealous you would have spent the whole evening with Harris just to show me I couldn't do it. But I didn't bring her for that. I brought her to make a play for Harris and take him away from you. And it cost me $60 to do it, too."

"Fifty dollars," echoed Thelma.

"Sure," said Joe. "I saw her picture in the paper. She had just won a beauty contest. Most of those babies like to cash in on it so I hired her to come along with me and get Harris out of the way."

Misplaced Man Shifted About

By B. P. R.

By GILBERT SELDES

Gilbert Seldes

I wonder if we are all getting hard and cruel from living in a Presidential year or possibly from lack of ready money. I know that six months ago when I gave in full my suggestion for eliminating the million men I met with nothing but protests—probably from the same people who objected to my much better scheme of putting little children to work so that grownups could have a holiday in the ten best years of their lives. And now, when I reverted to the subject and noted Mr. Lawrence Dennis' objections, I am applauded and people come forth ready to do the dark deed and full of suggestions ranging from machine guns to the following from Mr. Thaddeus Lasak of Jersey City. His elaborate and full of side issues, but I am sure his system would work.

"In my 20 years of existence," writes Mr. Lask, "I find there is much misplacement in vocations. Men and women hold positions which they are not capable of filling. Instead of the 'Forgotten Man' it really is the 'Misplaced Man.' Persons being too good or not good enough for their job, or vice versa. Much of this, we know, is brought about through graft, or buying of jobs. My contention is to put every man where he belongs and there will be room for all.

"If it was compulsory for each and every man and woman to take a Governmental intelligence and physiognomy test, everyone would be aware of his or her brain capacity. The questions in the test could be compiled by a chosen committee of men—not difficult questions or those dealing with viewpoint or opinion. The idea is to probe the mind to its limit of intelligence. Henceforth on the Government records it would read: John Doe 65 per cent Int. D. R. (brain-power rating). All jobs would be classified according to the brain power required to fill them. A want ad in the newspaper would read or

"Office Clerk; 85 per cent B. P. R. Handle money; responsibility. Neat, conscientious,' etc.

"Saleslady 40 per cent B. P. R.; about 21 years old,' etc.

"This system would keep shopgirls and stenographers away from Hollywood, porters and truck drivers out of executive and political positions, prevent the wasting of time striving for unattainable positions.

"Through schooling and study people could raise the percentage of their brain power, making the eligible for better jobs. And this rate everyone would earn exactly the amount they deserve, in other words 'True to Type.'

"But I'm afraid it wouldn't work. Before the experiment could make such tests, people, fearing their pride and vanity, would refuse and say that the whole project would be abandoned. On the other hand, if a state was set for such tests so many would flee to other lands or commit suicide that only a handful would remain, resulting in a shortage of man power."

Mr. Lask betrays the usual prejudice of the intellectual—he wants to keep truck drivers out of executive positions. But where is the test to keep executives out of the seats of the truck drivers? From the way most of them drive I judge that minds are on serious problems. They are certainly not on the simple little things like green lights, slowing at corners and the rules of the road.

VALENTINE -:- By Hazel Livingston

A Heart-Grinding Novel Depicting Love and Disillusionment

She pulled it out at last, one of those absurdly simple little wool tailored dresses that look almost inexpensive, and are marvels of line and cut and color. This one was black and there was a most twisted scarf of queer dull silks that went with it, and a smart enough-to-get-by hat.

"Oh, Millie—just what I've LONGED for! Though the things you gave me last year are so much granted than anyone else has that I don't get much use of them."

"Wear them, anyway," said Millie practically, trying the hat at a new angle, and proffering a pair of antique amethyst and pearl earrings at the same time.

"And Millie—"

"Here's the diamond bracelet—you see it's very simple. You can wear that anywhere."

Val looked at the circlet of winking, limpid stones.

"Millie, they're so beautiful! Everything's so beautiful. I just don't know what to say—but Millie, truly I haven't any place to wear all those beautiful things. You'd better keep them."

Millie sat down on the nearest sofa. "I know. If that isn't life! You have the things and they have not any place to wear them. Or else you haven't them, and you have places—"

"Thats' the way it is with me. You give me all these beautiful things, but truly I haven't any place to wear them! The places we go—"

Millie paused a warning finger. Val stopped talking. Millie tiptoed to the door, listened.

"Asleep," she whispered. She made a little face.

"Never mind," she said in her natural voice. "Things can't go on this way forever. We'll have our day yet—you and I—"

"Sure, adorable!" Joe said.

"Simply adorable. And I do like the old gentleman. Gosh, he has a real collection of beauty. For that matter, your mother is certainly a collector's piece. She's more than beautiful, Val. She's—"

He searched for the word, and Val supplied it.

"Grimaces. I know. Everyone feels it. People stare at her, they always have. Oh, I'm so glad you like her—"

She has been so afraid that they wouldn't like each other.

And now Millie and her husband, Mr. Harris, were visiting in Val's house, and everybody liked everybody else, and it made her so happy.

Mr. Harris, fragile and distinguished, sat in a corner and talked art and architecture to Joe. Millie, with her raven-black hair looped at the back of her neck, her beautiful brown longer and lovelier than ever, her exquisite rose and white skin, and her generous, laughing carmine mouth was like some exotic flower on a slender stalk.

WONDERFUL MILLIE

Millie wasn't only slim—she was really thin, almost angular. Her cheek bones showed so plainly now, and you realized the breadth of her beautiful shoulders and the slimness of her hips.

"I'm afraid she isn't well, that's all," Joe said. "She's almost as fragile as the old man, and while that mick-white skin and brilliant coloring are lovely they don't denote health if I know anything about it."

"Oh, she's always been like that —except not so thin. She's dieting—"

"Well, you better tell her to stop it," Joe said.

Val laughed at that. Just as if anyone could make Millie do anything she didn't want to do!

Millie was wonderful. She came into the house, and she didn't say "dear. If you'd just move that chair!" or "Rugs straight, never diagonal. Gracious! I thought everyone knew that!" the way Pearl Neely did.

She just moved around, and touched things, and somehow things began to look different.

Things blomed where Millie was! Even the sickly-looking geraniums in their pots looked livelier since Millie scratched up the earth around them and washed their dusty, greasy leaves.

"SUCH FUN TO COOK"

Her fingers smoothed dejected-looking cushions, and fluted delicate ornaments into interesting groups. She pleated the "homemade-looking" curtains here and there and finally achieved in the living room with her strong, white hands, and they fell into graceful, becoming, becalm graceful and finished.

"What are we going to have for dinner?"

She had followed Val into the kitchen, where she had gone to make a half-hearted look about in the hope that something could be offered—not a dinner, since there was nothing in the house, but something—a tomato juice cocktail, perhaps, for hospitality's sake.

"Why, I don't believe there's anything," Val had said rather weakly. "I thought we'd go out for dinner."

"But it's such fun to cook! I could make an omelette . . . oh, my dear! You've got a can of clams. I'll do scrambled eggs and clams, the way Jim—the way we used to have them, oh, a hundred years ago!"

Up went her sleeves "Let me have your apron, Val."

Val stood around, admiring, passing things. It must have been magic. Out of the odds and ends of some lettuce and a few vegetables Millie achieved a masterpiece of a salad, mixing the dressing the way she used to do, adding a drop of this and drop of that, and tasting as she went.

"Why, Val, this is wonderful!" Joe said.

"Millie did it," Val admitted a little sadly.

TELLS ENVY OF VAL

And afterwards, when they were in the kitchen, cleaning up together, Millie scolded a little.

"Perfect nonsense, you're being so helpless," she said. "Even if Julia didn't teach you anything, why can't you learn? Nobody taught me. I just learned. Why, the happiest days in my whole life were when I was living in some little dump where I could fuss and cook—"

"Why, Millie! You said only this afternoon that you were happy now because you had so much money you didn't have to do anything!"

How a Fascinating Heroine Met Old Problems in a New Way---By the Author of "The Flapper Wife," Etc.

Mary Faith Watches With Eyes Full of Trouble as Kim Dances With Claire

The colored woman who helped out whenever the Maddons had parties was just emerging from their suite when Mary Faith arrived. She held the door open, and Mary Faith stepped inside. No one saw her for a moment as she stood in the tiny foyer, taking in the scene in the living room. Everything was just as she had known it would be. Four or five people were gathered around the cocktail wagon at the far end of the room. Three or four others knelt on the rug beside a backgammon board. One couple danced slowly and dreamily in the middle of the floor. Kim and Claire Clairea yellow head was tilted back in the crook of Kim's arm, and she was saying something to him that made him smile. There was something in his face—a look of tender absorption—that made Mary feel as if someone had taken tight hold of her heart and was squeezing it. And then in an instant this look was gone. Kim had caught sight of her. He said something to Claire, and both turned and called out, "Hello, Mary Faith!" Then the two of them came forward

"Hello, wife!" Kim said. "I had an idea you'd be along pretty soon, if I just waited for you."

Waiting for Her

"Yes, he's been fairly pacing the floor, waiting for you," Claire put in, and the group around the tea-wagon burst into a roar of laughter.

Jack Maddon had come up behind Mary Faith. "Let me take your coat," he said.

"Thanks, Jack."

They greeted each other gravely in the midst of the confusion and the crazy din, exactly as two people might who spoke the same languare might have faced each other in a crowd of foreigners

"Do you want to come out to the kitchen while I wash glasses?" he asked

"That great idea," said Kim raucously. "You and Mary Faith go out and do your 'hewers of wood and drawers of water' act, while you're doing that, I'll dance with your wife."

Claire Interrupted

"Oh, come on and dance then and don't talk so much, Kim, some!" Claire interrupted. With troubled eyes Mary Faith watched them dance across the room. She felt just then that she would cheerfully surrender a year of her life to be able to do what they were doing—to dance Kim away from everybody else, and make him like it.

For there was no doubt that Kim did like it. He followed Claire around the flat like her shadow for the rest of the night. Mary Faith watched them thoughtfully, jealously, and with a kind of sick despair, whenever she emerged from the hot kitchen where she and Jack were cooking the breakfast that everybody demanded along toward four o'clock.

"Gosh, I'm tired!" he said, opening a can of tomatoes for the omelets that Mary Faith was preparing. He sounded tired. Tired and discouraged. "I wish this crowd would clear out and let us get some sleep. Claire can do this sort of thing every night in the week, I don't know how she gets away with it."

"She doesn't work all day the way you do," Mary Faith reminded him

Works All Day

"Sandy works all day," Jack said "and he's as fresh as a daisy right now." He nodded his head in the direction of the living room. "Listen to him."

Mary Faith had been listening to him for the past five minutes. He had been singing "Frankie and Johnnie" for the crowd, and he was in the middle of a song:

"This story has no morals—
This story has no end,
This story only goes to show
That there ain't no good in men—"

"When whole place smells like a brewery, too," Jack went on, and then suddenly he laughed.

"He's a very good host, am I, Mary Faith?"

Mary Faith turned from the stove and faced him. "The trouble with you and me, Jack, is that we aren't 'good sports.' The only difference is that I try to be one, and I don't. I know there's a side of Kim that likes this sort of a good time, and I don't even pretend to understand that side of him."

It was a relief to him that she had never known until long after she married him, she reflected a little later, watching him and Claire and each other bits of toast and omelette. He was almost like a stranger to her, this loud-talking, laughing man, with his bloodshot eyes and rumpled blond hair

He Scowled

He scowled when she begged him to start home as soon as breakfast had been eaten and the crowd was beginning to dance and drink again. And it drove over her sickeningly that he had always treated her with something between dislike and indifference when he was with Claire Maidon and her crowd

"No, I'm not going home," he told her. "I'm having a good time. If you want to leave, it's more than okay with me . . . You sure do know how to put the graveyard touch to a party."

Mary Faith wandered how he could find this one of Claire's entertaining. It was so like all the other gatherings in the Maidon flat. The same drinks and games and dance music. The same people —the red-haired woman who always were pink, the one named Sally who always did a solo dance called "the mess-around" that she had learned on the invariably empty island, on a plantation in the South one year when she had wintered there; the little black musician man who could sit on a stone jug and light a match suck in the toe of his shoes without falling off the jug. To Mary Faith it was all very dull and very silly.

Mary Faith finally telephoned for a cab and went home. It was broad daylight when she was awakened by the sound of coughing. She opened her eyes to find Kim standing beside the bed, trying to get out of his coat and vest. When she tried to help him, she found that his clothes were damp and that there were drops of moisture on his hair.

"What happened, Kim? You're wet."

Raining Outside

He had to think for a minute before he answered her. "Raining, outside," he said finally. "Raining and snowing. My car stopped on the way home. Couldn't get it started again."

He refused to take the bath that she got ready for him, and by the time she had made him a cup of hot coffee he was sound asleep, breathing in a rapid wheezy way that made her remember the way he had breathed a few weeks before when he had bronchitis

He slept all day. Even the couch that shook his body every few minutes did not awaken him. And that night Mary Faith sent for the doctor, who said that Kim was in for another spell of bronchitis.

The next morning he was worse, and on the third day his fever rose to 104 degrees. Mary Faith called the doctor and by the time he arrived, Kim was delirious.

"Pneumonia," the doctor said gravely. "I've been afraid of this. You see, he never properly recovered from the first attack of bronch "t."

Nursed Kim

Day after day Mary Faith nursed Kim, hovering over him with medicine or the little clinical thermometer that told the story of the fever that was torturing him. One night when his temperature ran very high, he began to call for her She was sitting beside him and she laid her hand on his arm and asked him what he wanted.

"I want Mary Faith," he muttered, in the thick voice of delirium.

"So, 'way down deep in his heart, I'm the person he thinks of and wants," she told herself bitterly as she threw through the long hours of the night. He might flirt with a pretty girl, might go out to places like the Golden Pheasant Tavern for an evening's pleasure, or wander up to the Maidons' flat for a Dutch supper and a highball. But all those things were simply cheap excursions away from her, she mused. She and the baby and this little home of theirs were the important things in his life. She was tranquilly certain of it

On the ninth day the fever broke and Kim was "out of the woods." A week later he was well enough to sit up, and Mary Faith hung over him, her face tender and radiant with the happiness of being near him and taking care of him

The baby, who adored Kim, spent half his time in the room, trotting about on his small red steady legs, or rolling his red crochet ball up and down the counterpane of Kim's bed.

"It's so wonderful—you're getting well and the three of us are here together, safe and happy," Mary Faith said one bright sunny morning as she put fresh flowers in order. She leaned over him and laid her rosy cheek against his white one for a moment. But in that second she felt him draw away from her.

"If you're through fussing around in here, I'd like to lie down and be quiet," he said levelly. "Take the baby with you when you go."

He could not have hurt her more by striking her. He had struck her. He had seemed so wholly hers during the past week or two. But all the new love she was only because he had been weak and passive in his illness.

Mary Faith had been sleeping on the couch in the sitting room ever since New Year's night, and when Kim was well enough to go back to work she made no change in that arrangement. February warmed into March, and at the end of March things were just as they had been in the autumn before Kim's illness He stayed out late, for him, sometimes a week, making no excuse for his absences. In fact, he had very little to say to Mary Faith about anything When he did talk to her, it was of ordinary things

"Has my mail come back from the cleaner, Mary Faith?"

"It's in your closet, Kim."

"If you'll send up your grocery bill, I'll give you the money for it."

"Thanks, Kim."

No kiss now when he left for the office. No more pleasant evening, before the sitting room fire, No giggling little jaunts to the neighborhood moving-picture theater.

"What's he wrong?" Mary Faith asked herself a hundred times a day. "What have I done, or left undone?"

Port Group Will Attend Convention

Mayor Curley has designated the Board of Port Authority to represent the city at the 25th annual convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at Philadelphia, October 26-29, inclusive.

The committee of delegates comprises Louis E. Kirstein, Richard Parkhurst, Frank S. Davis, Thomas J. A. Johnson and Charles E. Ware, Jr.

FAMILY SAYS REYNOLD'S DEATH ACCIDENT

A stirring drama, involving love, prejudice and politics, is to be unfolded before the world next month, when Libby Holman and Ab Walker are brought to trial on a charge of slaying the former's husband, Smith Reynolds.

But was the tobacco heir slain, or did his own hand fire the death bullet? Is the case one of suicide, or did Libby and Ab actually conspire to remove young Reynolds?

To help find an answer to these mystifying questions that the Boston Evening American sent a special correspondent, Joseph Cowan, to Winston-Salem, N. C. The ninth instalment of this narrative is published today.

By JOSEPH COWAN

Winston-Salem, N. C., Oct 14— The Reynolds family is not convinced that Libby Holman and Ab Walker murdered Smith Reynolds. It is members are convinced, instead, that the boy was not a suicide either. They think, might have been accidental.

Will Reynolds, president of the executive committee of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and I had a long talk about the mystery surrounding the death of the boy on the floor of the Reynolds building. For the first time since Smith died the attitude of the family in this case was given to the public.

SMITH'S GUARDIAN

Since the death of R. J. Reynolds, the founder of the tobacco company, Will Reynolds has been at the helm of the corporation and at the head of the Reynolds clan He is the brother of R. J. the uncle of Smith, and one of the boy's guardians.

"Mr Reynolds," I began, "do you and the family believe that Libby and Ab murdered Smith"

For a moment he didn't answer He swung his chair around and looked out of the window at the panorama of the town of Winston Salem spread out beneath him. His face seemed to be directed particularly to the white, stone courthouse immediately below—the courthouse in which the two are soon to trial

"WHOLE TRUTH UNTOLD"

"I don't know what to make of this case, Mr. Cowan," he finally replied. "We and the family do feel that the whole truth has not been told."

We lit cigarets, which he supplied

"But let me answer your questions as well as I am honestly able. Do we think that Libby and Ab killed Smith?

"We are not thoroughly convinced of that. We haven't found enough evidence to convince us thinking so. Of this, though, we are certain.

"Accidental, nothing else."

"We do not for one minute think the boy killed himself. If his finger actually pulled the trigger of that gun, then it was an accident and nothing else. It is Smith's best interest that both Libby and Ab, if they know it, tell the whole truth. The truth couldn't hurt them, if that were the truth

"There is something that they haven't told, I believe. Who don't they come forward and make a clean breast of everything, if they are innocent?"

CAN'T BELIEVE ALL TOLD

"I've talked to both of them since that accident. I can't believe that they've told me everything."

"Accident," is the word Mr. Will, as everybody does here calls him, used. Every time he mentioned the shooting, accident is the word he employed

"I was out in Cleveland on July 6 when I got news of what happened. As chance would have it, Libby's father and I came here part of the way on the same train."

COULDN'T REMEMBER

"When I got to Reynolds', this was the second day after. I went up to see Libby. She was in her bed. Her father and I talked to her together.

"I asked her what had happened that night. All that she could tell me was that she awoke up with Smith calling her name. He was standing over her, she said, with a gun in his hand. She saw a flash and he fell over on her. She couldn't remember anything else.

"She couldn't remember anything about what had occurred the whole day before the accident. She couldn't remember anything that transpired the rest of that night or all the next day."

TRIES TO READ THOUGHTS

Mr. Will stopped talking for a minute. He looked right at me as if he were trying to read what I thought of this part of Libby's tale

Then he asked me a question

"Mr. Cowan, you've been a lot of investigating in this case. You've probably looked into a lot of mysteries like this one in your time. Do you think that Libby is telling the truth when she says she can't remember anything for three days, except this brief 'flash.'"

There was no reason why I shouldn't answer him So I did

"Mr. Reynolds," I said, "I can't believe that this story she tells is true. It doesn't seem any more reasonable to me than it does to you.

"But just because I don't think it is true doesn't make it false. Perhaps she really doesn't recall what happened, except what she has testified to at the inquest. Perhaps the shock of it all did drive everything out of her mind."

We had another cigarette.

"Well, maybe it is truth," he replied. "But I certainly have my doubts."

FATHER'S QUERIES VAIN

"Yes, it's possible," I said, "but I don't think it's probable."

To which he nodded in agreement.

"That night," he continued, "Mr. Holman and I tried to get her to refresh her recollection. Her father kept asking her to try hard to remember some more. It was no use.

"The next day young Walker came to see me. He had been telling Smith's sister that there was something about this affair that he couldn't tell anyone in the world except me

HEARD NOTHING

"I sat and listened to him. He went over the whole thing. Everything he told me I already knew. He had discussed all of it with the sisters, my nieces, and they had told me. I kept waiting for him to disclose to me what it was that he couldn't tell anyone except me.

"When he stopped talking, I hadn't heard anything new. So I said to him:

"What is there about this affair that you couldn't reveal to anybody except me?

"'Why, Mr. Will,' he replied, 'Libby was dead drunk that night.'

NO SECRET

"That's the last thing on earth I thought he was going to say. Everybody knew that Libby was drunk that night. I had heard that from a dozen people It was no secret

"Well, I replied, 'there isn't a person in Winston-Salem that doesn't know that. You're not telling me anything. And what is there about that which is so terrible a secret that you couldn't have told it to any one but me?'

"That is all I could get out of him. Libby had been drunk that night. Now I don't believe that he what he had in his mind at all, when he made the remark. For some reason, he must have changed his mind about telling me. I am certain that Ab knows what did happen that night and that he intended to tell me of this when he talked to Smith's sister."

SWITCH TO POLITICS

The phone rang. Someone at the other end of the wire was apparently asking Will about politics. Mr. Will knows all the answers to political queries about here

He's the mainspring in the Democratic party in North Carolina and one of the leaders in politics in the South.

"No," he spoke into the phone, very high, "I'm going to carry North Carolina by plenty, there's no doubt about that. The boys down here just made up their minds take here four years ago. They're sorry now they didn't all vote for Al. But they're all back in line now."

PLEADS LIBBY'S HINT

When he hung up I asked him what he thought of Libby's hint in her testimony at the inquest that perhaps Smith's shooting was accidental. He didn't know what I meant. He hadn't attended the inquest and he hadn't heard of any such hint. So I referred to the record of Libby's testimony and read it to him

"I think he was standing up now—I don't know," said Libby. "Usually when he came in with the gun at his head he would sit by me so I could have a chance to get up and sit on a level with him and push it away from him

"I don't know whether I sat up and grabbed his arm—I don't know whether I sat up and tried to touch him. But the only instinct I ever had before was to save him from that gun; get that gun away from him."

SURPRISED AT TESTIMONY

Reynolds was plainly surprised to hear this

"Why," he said, "I never knew of this before. She never told her father and me that. This is the first we talked to her. If that is the truth, if that is what actually occurred why doesn't she say so? That would be an accident of course

"Now I want to tell you something else, Mr. Cowan. This seems very strange to all of us. When did Smith develop this suicidal mania that Libby talks so much about."

NO THEORIES BEFORE

"I talked to his first wife, Ann Cannon. He never mentioned suicide to her. He never spoke of suicide to his brother Dick or to any of his sisters.

"Can't find anybody, except Walker and Libby, who will tell me that they or anyone ever threatened to take his life.

"I can't imagine any reason he would have to do so. He was a normal boy. He was a quiet boy—a studious boy

"The picture that has been painted of him in the press is all wrong. He was not a spendthrift he wasn't a heavy drinker."

"I ought to know something about this, because he got his allowances from his father's estate through me. We used to hold back on him. He was entitled to about $50,000 a year, but he never got it—he never even asked for it.

"Just before he married Libby, we had increased it to $1,500 a month. After his marriage, he came in here one day and said he could use $500 more a month, now that he had a wife.

RAISED TO $2000 MONTH

"I said to him, jokingly, 'Why Smith, I thought we can live as cheaply as one.' He smiled and replied, 'well, you're married, uncle. Can you live as cheaply as you did when you were single?' So we increased his allowance to $2000 a month. That's the most he ever got. That's what he was getting when he died.

"Smith didn't run up any bills against the estate, either. He lived within his allowance. Most of his money went for airplanes. That was his hobby. He flew to New York from here when he was only 15. I didn't know he had ever been up in a plane until I read the story of his flight to New York in the papers."

PREDICTS FAIR TRIAL

I had some more questions to ask Mr Will Could Libby and Ab get a fair trial? Had he known before the marriage that she was a fe ees? Did Smith know it? Was the Reynolds family as much against the marriage as it seemed privately counsel to come in here and prosecute Libby and Ab. As the law permits in South Carolina?

"Certainly," he replied, "they'll get a fair trial. Yes, we have been considering the advisability of getting counsel to conduct the prosecution. But I am almost certain that we won't

KNEW LIBBY'S FAITH

"I have great faith in the ability of Solicitor Higgins to handle this case himself. I think you can say almost with certainty that he will conduct the trial. There is no necessity that I can see now for the family to employ counsel to assist him.

"About that Jewess question. I'm terribly sorry to see it brought into the case. I was shocked when I was told that Mr. McMichael, the assistant state solicitor, had asked that question of two of the witnesses.

"Of course the family knew Libby was a Jewess. Smith told me that himself. He remarked that maybe it would do the Reynolds' blood a lot of good to have a Jewish mixture in it. I agreed with him

MANY FRIENDS JEWISH

"Some of the dearest friends I have are Jewish. I have a keen admiration for them. As a race they don't make any finer people.

Reynolds denied reports I had heard that the family has engaged private detectives to investigate Libby's past and to help the State procure evidence to convict—evidence that is lacking now

"No, Mr. Cowan," he said, "and I am in a position to know, no private investigators have been retained and none will be. We think the authorities here are capable of conducting any investigation that is necessary."

"Yes, I'll be glad to go," he said, "I'll get started right away." He got up to show me out of his hat

"Mr. Cowan, I've just got an invitation to go out to a barbecue Would you all like to come along?" I'll be mighty happy to have you"

"Would I" You couldn't hold me."

Fate of Owney Madden's Brewery Hangs on Sniffing Nose of Dry Agent

New York, Oct 14 (AP) The government hung its hopes of a padlock today on the nose of Joseph A. Frayne

Mr. Frayne, a prohibition agent purports on the day of May 30, 1930, to have been sniffing in the vicinity of 10th ave. and 25th st., where the brewery known as "Owney Madden's" stands

It is represented that as a sniffer, Mr. Frayne has few equals. The contention is made that he is able to inhale deeply and determine whether beer is being cooked in in the way of beer making in the area covered by his inhalation As he explained it to Federal Commissioner Cotter

"I was sniffing the air, and it was redolent with the odors of hops and malt and actually good beer, meaning beer that contained more than one-half of 1 per cent alcohol."

Just about the time his sniff had led him to this conclusion, he met Louis Halle, attorney, who now seeks to have the Frayne sniff thrown out of court

Mr. Halle, it developed, did not smell any beer. Perhaps he had a cold. That was not brought out.

As Frayne told Commissioner Cotter

"Mr. Halle came along, and I asked him if he could smell beer, he took a long sniff and said:

"Why, no; I think somebody's cooking cabbage around here."

Mr. Frayne then decided that Mr Halle didn't know good beer when he smelled it

Frayne said a policeman approached him, having seen the sniffing ceremonies The policeman said:

"If you're a prohibition agent and haven't got a search warrant, come in my beat."

Frayne had no search warrant but he was sniffer enough to know that nobody was cooking beer around there, so the place was raided.

What Commissioner Cotter is expected to decide between now and Monday is whether the Frayne sniff is admissible in law. He has already ified the raid; and if the brewery should be padlocked

FANNING

With GEORGE UNDERWOOD

Hey Nursie, Yoo Hoo! Meet you, Tomorrow. Bring Along Splints.

Is Ether Ready, Doc? A Great Football Day. War All Over the Map.

Let's Go and See 'Em Carry Away Wounded

WELL, OLD SAWBONES, you better get your tunneling and excavating tools ready. Oil up the ambuances. And Nursie, Nursie, you with the come hither look in your eyes and "Hi" vibrating so voluminously about you, is even makes the old grads in the stands want to break a leg, too, prepare to lay your cool hands on fevered brows. Meet you, tomorrow. Bring along the splints. The war is on! The shot and shell are not screaming so raucously on this sector of the fighting front with B. C. resting in the second line trenches and Harvard taking on the Penn State eleven, which lost to little Waynesburg in their last engagement. But on all other sectors, tomorrow, the fighting is hotter than it was along the Somme. If you don't think the carnage will be awful, new rules or not, just remember that among other things, Army tackles Pitt, Dartmouth faces Pennsylvania, Princeton takes on Cornell and Yale meets Brown. Those and a whole flock of other mid season major games are scheduled and if you don't think the boys are going to get bumped up a bit you don't know your football onions. New rules prevent injuries? Piffle! In the so-called minor games there already have been caved in conks, shattered ribs, cracked collar bones and busted legs and arms galore. You don't think that with the advent of the big games tomorrow the play is going to get more gentle, do you, Betty Co-Ed?' Injury preventing football rules are the same as Prohibition. Neither will click. O'mon Nursie, the boys all will be wanting you on the sidelines, tomorrow.

FOR THE BENEFIT of those who like to hear the fibula crack and the medulla oblongata crunch, here are some of the impending casualties in addition to the ones already mentioned. In the New England neck of the football woods you can see B. U. vs. Providence, Holy Cross vs. Detroit, Maine vs. New Hampshire, Bates vs. Rhode Island, Williams vs. Middlebury, Tufts vs. Bowdoin, Wesleyan vs. Haverford, Amherst vs. Hamilton, Colby vs. Vermont, Springfield vs. Alleghany, Mass. State vs. Conn. Aggies and Norwich vs. Worcester Tech. Hopping about the map you will find Navy vs. Ohio, Columbia vs. Virginia, Fordham vs. Lebanon Valley, Georgetown vs. N. Y. U., Lafayette vs. Colgate, Syracuse vs. Southern Methodist, Notre Dame-Drake, Minnesotta-Nebraska, Michigan-Ohio State, Illinois-Northwestern, Wisconsin-Purdue, Chicago-Knox, Carnegie Tech-W & J., Tulane-Vanderbilt, Tennessee-Alabama, Georgia-North Carolina, Georgia Tech-Alabama Poly, California-Washington State, Southern California-Loyola and Stanford-West Coast Army. If the M. D.'s don't get enough work out of that bunch they'll have to acknowledge that the depression is worse than ever.

WHILE THE GLORY that was Penn State's in the days when Light Horse Harry Lee, later a scintillating Army star, Hess, Redinger, Lightner, Killinger and other old football heroes roared for the Nittany Lions has somewhat faded, and although the Keystone State boys were humbled by lowly Waynesburg, last Saturday, there shouldn't be the pink tea aspect about tomorrow's imbroglio at the Stadium there was to the Buffalo and New Hampshire games. John Harvard can't hold back quite as much against the Nittany Lions as he did against the Bisons and the Wildcats. (You gotta have a knowledge of zoology when you're talkin' football, Aloysius). Not that anyone looks for a Penn State victory or even a repetition of the two draws the Nittany Lion got in the four previous Harvard conflicts. But the fans do look for Penn State to keep down the score.

TOMORROW'S IMBROGLIO with Penn State will be the last "soft one" for Harvard. Dartmouth is waiting right around the corner, and then in order come Brown, Army, Holy Cross and Yale. If you ask us, Clarice, Yale just now looks the softest of that lot. But the Yale Bulldog often looks like a Pomeranian in early October only to get the rabies and tear the pants off Jawn Harvard in late November. Without a victory on its slate, being held to draws by little Bates and Chicago in the two games played, Yale tackles the strong Brown eleven tomorrow, and then has to hurdle Dartmouth and Princeton before meeting Harvard in what the East long has considered the Big Game of the year Yale may find itself, as it oft has before, but the little birdies say it was a sorry day for Yale when they booted Benny Friedman off the coaching staff. It was Friedman, more than anyone, who pointed the Bulldog for Harvard last year. If the present coaching staff gets the team to function as a Yale team should, some of the best minds in football certainly will be surprised.

NOTRE DAME football vs the combination Warner system used by Lud Wray with the Braves will be on tap at the Tepee on Sunday when Jack Chevigny, assistant to the late Knute Rockne leads the Chicago Cardinals into the Wizaam. Headed by "Frosty" Peters, the former Illinois hero, and Jim Mevnihan, ex-Notre Dame center, Chevigny has assembled a squad of Middle West, Far West and Southern stars and drilled 'em in the use of the same formations and the same style of psay with which Notre Dame blazed its way across the football firmament under the one and only Rockne. The Cardinals will have to play Notre Dame football in the old Notre Dame way to beat the Braves who have struck their gait under Wray and now are playing some smashing football

FOR THOSE who like their semi-pro football, there are other Sunday games, including the skirmish between the Quincy Trojans and the Pittons at Dibsey Field and the University of Peabody vs. Beverly game at the Leo Buckley Stadium, Peabody. "Fish" Ellis of Tufts, Red Maloney and Sykes Hardy of Dartmouth, and Eddie Lawrence of the Brown Iron Men will be in the Peabody lineup.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN SPORTS

CRIMSON VETS TO OPPOSE PENN STATE

Penn State, spotting Harvard an advanta in size, weight, speed and numbers, as well as playing on a strange gridiro.., is confident of doing what no team has been able to accomplish thus far this season, and that is crossing the Crimson's goal line, when it takes the field at the stadium tomorrow afternoon.

Neither Buffalo nor New Hampshire came any where near that final Crimson marker.

Penn State, however, is much stronger than either of Harvard's first two opponents and it would not be surprising to see the Lions crash through for the first allen score of the year at the Allston horseshoe

STATE'S PUNCH HELD

Coach Bob Higgins is bringing north an aggregation that is bound to make hit. Even Coach Eddie Casey of Harvard is discountenancing that 7—6 defeat suffered by the Blue and White last Saturday. It appears that in order to catch Harvard unawares, the State team was willing to hold everything back and take a chance with straight running plays against Waynesburg

Coach Casey raised another junior varsity athlete to varsity ranking today. John Drinkwater, tall, 185-pound tackle, who starred at Thayer Academy will don a varsity uniform this afternoon and run through signals with Team C

CASEY LOSES KOPLOW

With Casey starting at center, the Crimson can present a practically veteran lineup, especially if Jack Crickard, halfback ace, is allowed to play against the Lions Crickard took his examination in abnormal psychology yesterday but as yet no report has been made on the result. The result may not be known until next week. In that event, Jack will be permitted to face the Lions

The Harvard squad was weakened considerably today by the loss of Morris Koplow, an outstanding tackle of last year's freshman eleven and counted upon to earn a first-team berth at the start of the current campaign.

The visitors' ability to gain under raps presages a tough day for Harvard although the latter's extraordinary manpower should tell a winning story in the end.

2 GREEN STARS OUT FOR PENN

Hanover, N. H., Oct. 14—The last strenuous workout for the Dartmouth eleven before the Pennsylvania game at Philadelphia, tomorrow, saw the return to the first team lineup of several regulars who had been temporarily ousted from their positions by substitutes.

Hal Mackey, veteran left end, was back in place of Bill Embry, while Al Baldwin regular tackle, replaced his substitute, Don Hagerman, and will receive the major portion of the tackle assignment in the Penn game.

Bill Clark, sophomore flash, who retired in favor of the speedy Wilbur Powers, whose long runs featured the Vermont and Lafayette games, returned to left halfback, and Dave Hedges, veteran back, has been selected to spell Jack Donovan, who is on the bench with a partially dislocated shoulder, at fullback.

Ward Donner, whose ability in blocking punts brought his renown last season, will be the only other regular beside Donovan who will be unable to start Saturday because of injuries.

Levinsky Gets Nod Over Sekyra

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 14—King Levinsky, Chicago heavyweight kept up a heavy attack for ten rounds to win a newspaper decision from Joe Sekyra of Dayton. Levinsky weighed 201 and Sekyra 178.

JUST A BRUIN BREWIN' TROUBLE

Ready to rip against Yale in the Bowl tomorrow is Penn Hargrove, ace carrier for Brown. Hargrove is the Bruins' top scorer.

Braves' Next Foe Follows Irish System

A taste of Notre Dame style football is the next grid clash for our football Braves, for this is the type of play which Jack Chevigny has taught his Chicago Cardinals for their Sabbath tilt at Braves Field.

The Braves, as it must be well known by now adhere more or less strictly to the Warner system for their part, and in consequence the long standing dispute between rooters of the two schools of grid thought will have further example to cite after the game Sunday.

Coach Wray, in his regular pronunciamento before the Braves swung into their final routine at the Tepee today announced that he desired the boys to stick closely to straight football in the Sunday endeavors.

Extension by the National Professional League officials to all the clubs the right to increase their squads from 20 to 22 players brought loud cheers from this particular end of the football league.

If is not only assured the two Braves newcomers, Joe Kresky and Carney Odin, of jobs with the team but it left many of those just on the fringe of making the club a lot easier in their minds.

Girl, 12, in Ga. Title Golf Semifinals

Atlanta, Oct. 14 (AP)—A slim little girl of 12, with large eyes and black hair and a friendly smile, stood on the first tee at the Brook Haven Country Club today, hardly believing she is a semi-finalist in Georgia's women's golf tournament.

The youngest player ever to qualify for the championship flight and by more than a decade of years the youngest ever to reach the next-to-last round of this tournament—that is Dorothy Kirby.

She's no different than any other 12-year-older you'll find—unless she's even more modest. She sees nothing unusual in her ability to play golf. She smiles and blushes and thanks people when they congratulate her, but she doesn't think she's done anything wonderful.

Its just a game to her. She hits her shots like her professional taught her—and the ball goes straight and true. The other girl just has bad luck, Dorothy thinks.

WOBURN BOOKS NEPONSET

The undefeated Woburn Town Team will try to keep its slate clean against the Neponset Town Team at the Woburn high stadium Sunday.

Woburn whipped the Malden Pros, 18 to 0, a week ago to continue with the untopplied class, and hasn't suffered a defeat in its three years of competition.

The East Boston Bruins will tackle the St. James Academy Club of Salem at American Legion Park in East Boston on Sunday afternoon. The game will start at 2:30.

Quite a number of South Boston fans will journey to the Cyclodrome in Providence on the Sabbath to see how the Pere Marquettes fare with the Steamrollers.

Crusaders Headed for Greatest Year Barring Mishaps

By BILL GRIMES

Worcester, Oct. 14—In the opinion of the undergraduates, alumni and faculty of the college as well as the populace at large, the football material at Holy Cross this fall is the finest in history.

Any time such learned and respected judges of gridiron material are in agreement, regardless of the real facts, the head coach is on the "spot." And, if the team fails to live up to its high rating by the experts, the "wolves" will demand the mentor's blood.

Potentially, Holy Cross is strong. On paper, the Crusaders shape up as the most promising in the annals of football at Mt. St. James. But, unfortunately, football games are won and lost on gridirons and not on paper.

UNFAIR RATING

In all probability, the Crusaders are headed for one of their greatest seasons. But, still, it is unfair to expect great things of them at this state of the race.

An analysis of the situation brings out the fact that Holy Cross lost Capt. Phil O'Connell, one of the greatest all-around players the game ever produced and Les Griffin from its 1931 backfield. Also, its first string ends, Jim Cavaleri and Tony Colucci, the "grand opera twins" John Baiorno, a giant guard from Brockton and Eddie Bergin, a small but very aggressive center from Somerville, are gone.

Don Kelly and Marty Murray are the sole survivors of last year's first backfield. Kelly has been on the hospital list since the opening game with New River

Tony Rovinski is trying to fill ex-Capt. O'Connell's shoes at quarterback, an assignment which few, if any, players in the country could carry out, while Charlie Jarvis has the first call on the right halfback berth, which was held down by Les Griffin the past three seasons.

Appreciating the loss he suffered in the graduation of O'Connell, Head Coach John J. McEwan is developing a big, fast powerful line which he hopes will offset some of the missing offensive strength.

FAVULLI BRITTLE

Mike Favulli, the 200-pound center, and Worcester's gift to football, who has been favored to win the regular center berth for two years, but has been forced out each season by injuries, is the first string snapperback. Much depends upon Mike's ability to take it this season. If he is able to keep off the hospital list, the Crusaders' chances are bright.

But three of the other regular linemen are sophomores who have yet to go through the acid test. Until they have proven their prowess under pressure, the Holy Cross outlook is problematical.

Unquestionably, "Buzz" Harvey, Jimmy Moran and Eddie Britt, the sophomores in question, are promising candidates but the stamp of approval cannot be placed upon them for at least another month.

Harvey stepped right into the first varsity lineup as left tackle.

Jimmy Moran, who came to the "Cross" from Boston College high, is another 200-pound, six-foot giant, and, like Harvey, was an all-scholastic selection. Moran is playing John Baiornos' old position, right guard.

Charlie Reiss, who was regular tackle last year, and Eddie Britt, from Lexington high, are the new flank men

Without Phil O'Connell and relying to a great extent upon three sophomores, and a tackle, who has been converted into an end, Holy Cross is facing a serious problem, especially in view of the fact that of the six remaining games, four of them will be staged upon foreign soil,

Revere 118-Pounder Enters St. Joe's Show

George McKinley of Revere has forwarded his entry for the St. Joe tournament Saturday night at Mechanics building. McKinley has piled on six pounds since last spring and will fight tomorrow in the 126-pound class. Other classes on the card include 126, 135, 147, 160 and 175 pounds.

The entry list for tomorrow night is over half a hundred which means that there will be 40 or more bouts. To be sure that they will completed before midnight, Cuddy announced that the tournament will start at 7:30 p. m.

COACHES OPPOSED TO PLAYING 'SET-UP' GAMES

SPORTS

By BILL CORUM

Pay of Pro Grid Stars Surprising. Pair of Southerners Turn Republican. Rescue Work Greek To Shipwreck Kelly.

New York, Oct. 14.

Once when Frank (Buck) O'Neill was covering a World Series in which the Athletics were playing either the Cardinals or the Cubs, I don't recall, Ol' Marster C. Mack went back into his long memory and into the gay nineties to revive and reproduce a perfect squeeze play that scored a run. This pleased Frank so much that his quiet chuckles could be heard as far as the centerfield bleachers, and writing about it later he wrote:

"Connie Mack surprised Joe McCarthy and the Cubs when he ordered so and so to bunt so and so across the plate in the such and such an inning. He also surprised the fans and the baseball experts in the press box." And then, wishing to make it as strong as possible, he added: "Why he even surprised me!"

Thus, on the ground that it surprised me, I'll say that you will be surprised to know that when Tim Mara sends his New York Giants football team out onto the Polo Grounds gridiron to play the Brooklyn Dodgers Sunday afternoon, he will be paying his players more than Jake Ruppert pays the New York Yankees, the highest paid baseball team in the world. That is, on a per man per game basis, he will be paying them more.

Cagle Gets More Per Minute Than Ruth

Mara has no $75,000-a-year player, such as Babe Ruth, on his professional football squad. But he pays Red Cagle, who took a four-year course at West Point to get to be a sports writer on the New York Evening Journal, $650 a game. And if you will take a sheet of paper and a pencil and hire a public accountant you will find out that this puts the red head ahead of the gentleman of the celebrated waistline.

You will remember Cagle as the young man who rode out of West Point on the wings of matrimony.

Cagle is also one of the four famous football players who recently flew to Washington to pump the hand of President Hoover and assure him that they were for him come beer or high water. Accompanying him on the trip was his teammate, Admiral John Sims (Shipwreck) Kelly, and I have just come from visiting them at their hotel.

I went there to ask them how it happened that two Southern boys should be so concerned with the political fortunes of a Republican. They didn't quite seem to know. Maybe they just went for a plane ride.

Admiral John Sims (Shipwreck) Kelly is, to be sure, in no wise related to Colonel Alvin (Shipwreck) Kelly, who takes to a flagpole like a possum takes to a persimmon tree. It just so happened that when John Sims went down to Lexington, Ky., from his ancestral home in Springfield, Ky., to enter the university and get himself educated, that there was Alvin sitting on a flagpole as usual.

That year worried along, as the years will, and pretty soon John Sims Kelly was a sophomore and by the time he was a sophomore he was the warmest thing Kentucky University had seen in many's the day. They put him in the first football game and after that they couldn't get him out. Neither could the opposing teams.

But wait. That's not quite accurate. He did miss one game that fall. His grandmother died. That was the only game the Colonels lost that year.

Throughout the rest of his college football career "Shipwreck" Kelly started in every game, so that when Coach Steven Owen of the Giants sent him in as a substitute against Portsmouth he asked:

"Who do I report to, the referee or the umpire; you know I ain't ever done any substituting in all my life."

Shipwreck Anxious to See Friedman

The grandmother who died while he was attending Kentucky was the last of Kelly's relatives. He owns his own farm in the Blue Grass, where he breeds thoroughbred saddle horses, and he is a young man quite alone. From a financial standpoint he doesn't need to play professional football any more than Tommy Hitchcock needs to play polo.

In fact, his guardian, Percy Johnson, of the Chemical National Bank here in New York, insisted on him going to Europe with him this fall. But "Shipwreck" has been to Europe four or five times. He wanted to stay here and see what Benny Friedman had to offer. He has heard that Benny is a right smart football player, but he only half believes it.

He is going to let Benny try to prove it to him Sunday.

LITTLE SAYS DAYS OF 'PUSH OVERS' GOING

By DAVE J. WALSH

New York, Oct. 14 (INS)—Official sentiment is pretty generally opposed to a continuance of football relationships between big and little colleges and the scheduling of "set-up" games that lead to unfair competition and needless injuries, it was revealed today by a nation-wide poll among coaches and athletic directors conducted by the International News Service.

The survey was inspired by Swarthmore college's decision to withdraw from further gridiron meetings with the Univers. of Pennsylvania because modern football has developed into a game which can no longer be played on anything approaching equal terms between large institutions and small.

FURNISH OPPOSITION

A few hold that the little college, in many cases, is quite capable of making a match of it, something more.

Some of the exceptions are voiced by those at smaller institutions, notably Earl Jackson, athletic director at Knox College, and Jim Kelly, coach at De Paul.

Maj. Charles W. Mayer, at Franklin and Marshall, also sees nothing greatly against the system, while "Hap" Frank, line coach at Gettysburg (unofficial), by the little fellow's need of funds; and the old "Horseman," Elmer Layden at Duquesne, seems to say that it is all right, and then seems to say that it isn't, for he speaks of "the injuries" that often result.

On the other hand, Mal Stevens of Yale, says

"If the small college is outclassed, it is ridiculous to go ahead and sacrifice your inferior material to big colleges every year. It does not depend on the size of the college; it depends on the size of the football team."

HUNK CONDEMNS SITUATION

Heartley "Hunk" Anderson of Notre Dame also condemns the arrangement, meantime explaining that Notre Dame's 72 to 0 game with Haskell last Saturday was booked four years ago when Haskell had good players and petitioned for the engagement in order to "make a little money."

Dick Hanley of Northwestern claims the big team is more liable to injury because "the men aren't keyed for the game mentally or physically." He is against the system for what he terms "purely selfish reasons." There is nothing in such a game for either team, he states.

"The day of early season 'setups' is passing," says Lou Little at Columbia University.

"Pennsylvania is gradually working toward a full schedule of major games," says Dr. Lewis Mercer, Penn's athletic director, who, strangely enough, once held the same position at Swarthmore.

As for James L. McConaughy, President of Wesleyan University, he says of the Penn-Swarthmore break:

"It is in keeping with the movement of small colleges to play among themselves."

Other opinions follow:

Elmer Layden, Duquesne: "If the smaller colleges want to get somewhere, they must play teams from larger institutions. However, if the squad is small, its condition dubious and its players inferior, such games are likely to lead to injuries."

Jack Cantz, Dartmouth: "I'm dead against the set-up game."

Chick Meehan, Manhattan: "Money must be raised to support athletic programs. It is only through these games with bigger teams that they can be sure of large guarantees."

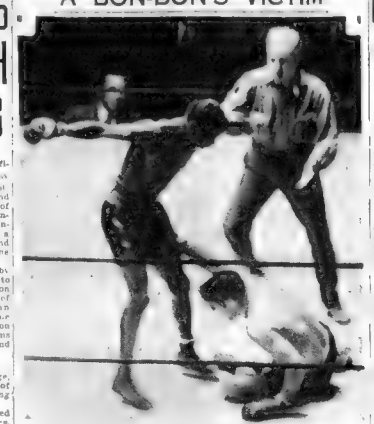
A BON-BON'S VICTIM



It took 12 rounds, but the Havana Candy Kid finally stopped Lou Feldman and today is wearing the featherweight crown. Here you see young Feldman after he had sampled some of the Keed's right handers in the 12th. Four straight right-hand shots in the head had Feldman so far down "queer street" the referee stopped it to save him. (International News Photos.)

ATTELL MOANS AS 'KEED' WINS

New York, Oct. 14—Mr. Abie Attell, the greatest featherweight that ever lived, sat at the Madison Square Garden ringside and watched with a pained expression as Kid Chocolate, the black beanpole from Havana, defeat cautious Lew Feldman, of the Bronx, for the championship he held so long and so well.

Abie stuck it out until Referee Patsy Haley stopped the unequal contest in the 12th round.

For the most part, they hop scotched about the ring Chocolate coaxing and Feldman presenting plenty of arms and elbows.

"Imagine them hums fighting for my title," moaned Mr. Attell plaintively.

"If it wasn't against the law, I'd climb up there right now and lick the two of them together, even at my age. They ain't boxers. They're just a pair of throwers."

FRIARS PICKED TO BEAT B. U. TOMORROW

Despite the fact that football interest is at its highest peak at Boston University and the rally here today was most enthusiastic a cold analysis of the rival lineups made Providence College a slight favorite to defeat the Terriers when the season grid relationship is settled on Field Weston tomorrow after a lapse of five years.

The Friars have a veteran line averaging 190 pounds and a backfield that averages 150 pounds. This weight will give the visitors a 10 pound advantage per man over the Terriers.

The edge in weight which he Dominicans will enjoy isn't bothering the Terrier coaches but as much as that gain looked great at Lark Court Gardens. It is not expected to show.

Ray Croteau, a left-handed passer from Fall River, is reported to be the most accurate heaver the Dominicans have ever had. His passes were responsible for a tie with Rutgers this year and the Providence coaches are of the opinion that if Croteau had not been injured he could have played against Holy Cross the result might have been different.

Croteau will have good targets to shoot at as six of the ends are good pass receivers.

While Providence is expected to exhibit an aerial attack, the Terriers will have in content them selves with a running attack. George Guyette the only outstanding passer on the B. U. squad is definitely out with a wrenched knee and his successor Johnny Ulman, has never done any passing.

4 Harvard Frosh on Injured List

Four regulars will be out of the Harvard freshman lineup in second game of the season at Exeter tomorrow afternoon.

Lane, right halfback, Shaines Kelly right end, Prout, right guard and Gridley, left guard, are on the hospital list today as a result of injuries which cropped up during the past week of scrimmage.

Kelly Pappalepe former Salem Clash will start at quarterback for the Crimson. Pappalepe weighs only 154, started the season among the scrubs, but has worked his way to the top of the list of signal callers within two brief weeks.

George Gulian, former Newton high star, will replace Prout at right guard.

Mat Results

Salem—Jim Browning, Missouri, defeated Bull Martin, New Jersey, who was disqualified for roughness.

New York—Bruno Gerrasini, Italy, defeated Herb Freeman, New York.

Vancouver, B. C.—Ed Don George, 218, Detroit, defeated Harry Kruskamp, 212, Cleveland, two of three falls.

Washington, D. C.—Ruby Dusek, 214, Omaha, threw George Vassell, 203, New York, 44:00.

MEDFORD-EVERETT RESUME GRID RELATIONS

FEATURE GALA SCHOOL CARD TOMORROW

By BILL CONNELL

School football machines are wound up to their highest pitch today for a Saturday presentation of highlight conflicts.

Everett fans tomorrow parade to the Medford high field on Fulton st, to watch the resumption of football relations between the two schools after a lapse of several years.

Old rivals, the twain parted athletic relations following a football game debate off the field. That argument prompted a torrent of words which ultimately washed out the game as a Greater Boston fixture. Now all is peaceful again. So the boys may proceed with their business of flattening each other's plays and players.

BIG CROWD DUE

The turnstiles will click merrily at the Medford field, for the cash customers are headed for this scramble in large numbers. And why not?

Medford was figured as a setup for any foe until last week, when it held Somerville scoreless. At the same time Newton was outpaying the favored Everett eleven, which was fortune's to get a scoreless deadlock.

Everett appeared lifeless in the Newton game. A combination of the heat, and overconfidence dulled the edge of the flashy Everett attack.

Coach Denny Glides took his youngsters out this week, and rebuilt the flame which has kept the team unbeaten.

Tomorrow, Medford will face an aroused Everett team, with Ed Schwerdt, Pini, Committo and other backfield stars twinkling behind a dynamite line.

Lynn English's visit to Malden is another good Saturday game. Tom Whelan has been building slowly at Lynn, with only a few very capable boys as a nucleus. He may catch the Malden eleven off tomorrow and stage an upset.

Capt. Al Kerwin, out with a charley horse; Joe Kelley, stranded with his dented ear, are two big backfield bases to the McGuirkmen. Sam Pashoian, Fred Hanifan and the other lads are filling in nobly and may keep the enemy on the run until Quarterback Kelley is back in November. Kerwin isn't likely to be of much more use to Malden this season, unless he is rested right up to the final one or two games.

UNBEATEN TEAMS CLASH

Two unbeaten teams collide when Fitchburg marches into Arlington. It's all a question of line. Fitchburg has the heavier frontier. Arlington's linemen are game, and fast. If they can give the plunging Arlington backs a half a chance, Fitchburg is going to fall.

Haverhill rolls into Waltham and may roll over Jack Leary's team. Jack has taught his boys a lot of football this season, but Haverhill seems too heavy and smart for the Watchmakers.

Boston College high jaunts to Lawrence for a game which will attract plenty of Merrimack Valley fans. This is a game which has no favorite, starting, and is one of the finest on the bill of fare.

Brockton, which ranks with Haverhill, out front among eastern Mass teams, skips to Lynn to try its stuff on Classical. Brookline, which plays a slim schedule this year, is host to Revere.

RISING STARS OF SCHOOL FOOTBALL GALAXY

Ed Little, Everett end, left, and Ira Jivilikian, Malden, catching pass, are a couple of young school stars who are fast moving toward zenith grid rating. Both are in action tomorrow, when Everett tackles Medford, and Malden plays host to Lynn English. These two are among the best young football players of the year. A whole new crop of stars has replaced the idols of last season.

EASTERN GRID TEAMS HOLD LIMELIGHT

Renewal of half dozen quarrels among eastern teams shoves intersectional combat into the background in the Atlantic Seaboard's football slate for tomorrow.

With such battles as Pitt-Army, Cornell-Princeton, Yale-Brown, Penn-Dartmouth, Colgate-Lafayette, New York University-Georgetown, Harvard-Penn State and Carnegie Tech-Washington and Jefferson to look forward to, eastern fans may be excused if they pay less attention than otherwise they might to the meetings of Syracuse and Southern Methodist; Columbia and Virginia; Holy Cross and Detroit and Navy and Ohio University.

On the basis of what the rival teams have accomplished so far the big games seems to line up something like this:

PITT-AMY—Pitt the favorite despite a green line that has yet to be tested. The Panthers, with halfbacks Paul Reider and Warren Heller, boast a terrific attack on the ground and in the air. Army, none too impressive against Furman, perked up noticeably against Carleton any may be ready to atone for last year's 26-0 walloping.

CORNELL IS CHOICE

CORNELL-PRINCETON — Cornell is the popular choice, although the Tigers are certain to find the rejuvenated Tigers much tougher than they were last year.

PENN-DARTMOUTH—A tossup in view of the fact that Penn has not yet been tested. Dartmouth a victory over Lafayette was too close for comfort. But the Indians' attack should work more smoothly tomorrow.

COLGATE-LAFAYETTE—The Leopards played well against Dartmouth and uncovered a fine back in Harold Wright, but it is doubtful whether they can cope with the poyerful Colgate array which has romped through three minor opponents so far.

N. Y. U. HAS POWER

N. Y. U.-GEORGETOWN—Another close dust in prospect with Georgetown's greatly speed paired of against N. Y. U.'s superior power. Georgetown was unimpressive in whipping Canisius by one touchdown Sunday, but the Hoyas probably were working no harder than they had to.

HARVARD-PENN STATE—This contest of ancient, if only occasional rivals, looks like a romp for the Crimson in view of Penn State's defeat at the hands of little Waynesburg last week.

YALE-BROWN—Most experts are agreed that Yales ties with Bates and Chicago failed to draw a true picture of the Bulldog's abilities and expect considerable improvement this week. Brown hasn't beaten the Elis since 1926 and has won only four games all told out of the 38 the wto teams have played.

W. & J. HAS EDGE

CARNEGIE TECH-W. & J.—Acontest between old rivals with the edge, if any belonging to W. & J.

Of the intersectional games, Columbia is strong favorite over Virginia and Syracuse over Southern Methodist but the Navy-Ohio University and Holy Cross-Detroit games look like even-Stephen affairs with no real basis for comparison.

The Football Roundup

West Point, N. Y.—Army may not be able to beat Pittsburgh Saturday, but the Cadets have the idea they are ready to try. They slacked up in their intensive preparations yesterday and merely went through a half-speed drill on everything they had learned earlier in the week.

Philadelphia—Penn is running into plenty of trouble in its preparations for the Dartmouth game. Faced with the necessity of picking a good substitute for Capt. Stan Sokolis yesterday, the Quakers were forced indoors by rain and cold, and had to practice in crowding fleet in Weightman Hall. The job went to Carl Palombo.

Princeton, N. J.—Princeton's Tigers have been on the warpath offensively all week in their preparations for the Cornell game but when it came to a defense drill they didn't do so well. The third team, equipped with Cornell plays gained steadily against the varsity yesterday.

Providence, R. I.—If Brown's hopes of beating Yale Saturday are fulfilled it will be the Bruins fifth victory in a series that started back in 1893. In 36 games they have won only four, the last in 1926, and tied two.

Scranton, Pa.—It St. Thomas wants to take to the air against Manhattan Saturday, Jerry Stuigatis, end, is the man to do it. His of-time amusement is aviation and he is a registered pilot.

Durham, N. H.—University of New Hampshire's football team, crippled through the loss of three players, went through a light workout today for the clash wit University of Maine tomorrow. The loss of John McGraw and Ruddy Gerard, backs, and Ben Dorson, first reserve center, sapped the team of much of its strength.

Williamstown — Captain Thayer was back in the lineup at center for the Williams football eleven today, but whether he will play against Middlebury tomorrow was uncertain.

Middlebury, Vt.—Wesleyan was ready today for its game tomorrow with Haverford at Haverford. The varsity yesterday showed up well, tearing holes at will through the second team in scrimmage. Coach Oberlander plans to start his heaviest backfield, Terrell, Hunteres, Fred Wallace and Moroz.

Amherst, Mass.—With two linemen on the injury list, Massachusetts State College completed training today for the game with Connecticut Aggies tomorrow.

TUFTS OFF FOR BOWDOIN TODAY

Tufts starts for Brunswick, Me., to take on Bowdoin tomorrow with the starting lineup still a mystery.

Coach Lew Manly has been giving several of the second team trials in Team A berths, and they have given good account of themselves. Several of the first team are worried about their jobs and maybe not without good cause. More than one second stringer today may be a varsity starter tomorrow.

The Jumbo chances for a win over the strongest Bowdoin team in years are held high at the Medford college. An aerial attack is expected from the Pine Tree Staters. The Jumbo boys are ready to retaliate with some classy passes themselves, and have perfected several new ground gaining rushes.

PUBLIC INVITED TO MYOPIA

Willowdale, the estate of Bradley Palmer at Topsfield, will offer a busy scene tomorrow when the Myopia Hunt Club holds its 20th annual race meet. Sumner Pingree, owner of Flying Horse Farm and racing secretary for the meet, gave out word today that one of the finest entries ever to race under Eastern Horse Club auspices will compete.

Forty-one horses, representing the cream of New England's thoroughbreds, will contest the six races on the card, which starts at 10 o'clock. A cordial invitation has been extended by Myopia Hunt Club to the public to witness the program without charge.

Six races, evenly divided between steeplechase and flat events, will be offered, with the Turner Hill Cup chase, over a distance of three and one-half miles, the feature. The other cross-country races are at two and one-half miles each, with the flat races limited to four and one-half furlong dashes.

20 GRAND MEETS EQUIPOISE

New York, Oct. 14 (INS)—After taking a trimming from C. V. Whitney's Mad Frump in his last race, Twenty Grand, champion three-year-old of last year, hopes to vindicate that defeat by taking the measure of Mad Trump's stablemate, Equipoise, in the Laurel, a mile feature at the Laurel track tomorrow.

But that defeat with the recent victory of Equipoise in the Havre de Grace handicap, has swung the consensus almost entirely to the Whitney horse.

By his victory in the Havre de Grace Cup, which he accomplished in near-track record time, Equipoise firmly established himself as the peer of the all-age division of 1932 and no possible upset can oust him from this position so late in the year.

Both Equipoise and Twenty Grand have been working well for the laurel, the former going a handy mile in 1 42 2-5 which well demonstrates his fitness. Twenty Grand was permitted to sprint the same distance in 1 41 which shows that he means business. Both horses were sound after their trial.

PENN CUTS GRID SCHEDULE

Philadelphia, Oct. 14 (AP)—Moving ahead with its policy of lessening the emphasis on football as an intercollegiate sport, the University of Pennsylvania today had settled on a 1933 schedule of one "tune-up" game an dsix major contests, the shortest in the institution's gridiron history.

Under the new schedule, the 1933 season will open on October 14, two weeks later than this year's first game and three weeks later than the season opening of previous years.

The first game next year will be with rankin and Marshall, the only small college on the list, and Pennsylvania's opening game opponent for many years, allowing the P and M game ennsylvania will meet Dartmouth, Navy Lafayette, Ohio State, Penn State and Cornell in order.

B. C. CENTER OUT FOR YEAR

Gregory Sullivan second-string center of the Boston College eleven, will be lost to the team for the rest of the season as a result of an injury received in the game with Centre College Wednesday. Sullivan, sent into the contest to relieve Mike Romano, hurt his shoulder and was removed from the contest. The X-ray showed that he had a broken collar bone.

Sullivan was the only severely injured member of the Eagles, although Dick Reynolds, the tackle, was cut on the cheekbone.

Coach Joe McKenney yesterday pointed out the errors of omissions and commission of his boys in the holiday game, and gave the remedies which must be applied before the game with Marquette a week from tomorrow.

Public Sale of Yale-Army Tickets

New Haven, Oct. 14—For the first time in several years there is to be a wide public sale of tickets for the Yale-Army football game this year, the Yale Athletic Assn. office announced. The sale begins this morning at the athletic association office, and on Monday at the New York Yale Club and other points in New York and Connecticut. An unlimited number of tickets may be bought for the game, which will be played in the Yale Bowl a week from Saturday.

So What?

—By JOE MOONEY—

"For a slight consideration," writes Wise Guy, "I will give you the low down on this Unknown Winston person.

"You may know his fight record, but did you know all his checks are signed Anonymous?

"He's a great indoor fighter. Why shouldn't he be? He's been under cover all his life.

"And another thing you didn't know. Unless Ernie knocks him dead, he'll be Unknown Schaat.

"He's one of those tide fighters—in and out all the time.

"He's probably the most famous Unknown in the country, unless you count the vice-presidential candidate of the Socialist party."

D'GLANE FEARS WORKS

BOWSER PUTS HIM ON SPOT, HE CHARGES

By JACK CONWAY

Henri DeGlane will leave for France regardless of the outcome of his world's heavyweight championship wrestling bout with Al Morelli at the Boston Garden tonight.

"I have booked passage for France," DeGlane told the today. "Win, lose or draw against Morelli, I'm going home. I have not seen my folks for almost a year. Max Schmeling goes home to Germany after each boxing bout. Why not Henri DeGlane go home to France after he has had almost 20 matches?

"I have been fair with the American public. Also with Paul Bowser. I don't believe Bowser was quite fair with me when he insisted that I meet Morelli tonight rather than a week from tonight. I asked for more time in which to train.

"Bowser held me to my contract with him. I went to run out of the match. I'll beat Morelli just the same. Then I shall go home. And I'll come back when I get good and ready. Mons. Bowser won't like that so much. We Frenchmen have a right.

"Call it temperament or what you will, but Bowser and DeGlane have not been as chummy of late as they were in the days after DeGlane won the championship by defeating Strangler Lewis at Montreal.

SAME OLD STORY

It's the old story of too much money. When DeGlane was broke, he was glad to show as often as Bowser asked him to, but now that he is very much in velvet the champion wants to pick his spots.

It hasn't been any secret in wrestling circles that DeGlane has been particularly opposed to meeting Morelli. Not that he doesn't believe he can beat the former Boston College football hero, but rather on account of his fear that persons powerful in the mat game would prefer Morelli as champion.

DeGlane, like most of the other foreign champions, is suspicious. He fears he will be given the well at nown "works" if there is an opportunity to crown Morelli tonight.

"The rumor that Morelli will be given the breaks tonight is amusing," said Bowser. "I shall name a referee who will see that both men get an even break. Even though I might like to see an American champion, I would not tolerate unfair play to DeGlane or to anybody else.

"I shall name a referee who has high standing. If Morelli wins, he will receive the credit to which he will be entitled."

LUTZE DISAPPOINTED

Nick Lutze of California was disappointed when informed that DeGlane was planning to return to France. Lutze is anxious to get another crack at the champion. Nick battles Dr. Freddy Meyer of Chicago in the 30-minute semi-final tonight.

Another 30-minute bout will find "Gentleman" Jack Washburn in action against Pat Fraley, Irish heavyweight. Washburn is also hot after another DeGlane go.

Jim Browning and Charley Strack will tangle up in the feature preliminary.

THE STAGG AT EVE

Bittersweet was the grid broth sampled by Chicago's Amos Alonzo Stagg, the grand old man of the gridiron. Stagg faces retirement after 41 years of coaching, just when he was looking forward to another 15 good years of tutoring. The young fellow showed a lot of promise, too.

PAY TRIBUTE TO COACH STAGG

Chicago, Oct. 14 (AP)—They are singing the praises and telling the human side of Amos Alonzo Stagg, the grand old man of the mid-way today, now that he will retire next June from the position he has held for 41 years as director of athletics and head football coach at the University of Chicago.

"The greatest single influence for good in college athletics and football ever produced," was a tribute paid Stagg by Maj.-Gen. John L. Griffith, commissioner of athletics of the western conference.

The life of Stagg has been synonymous with the development of intercollegiate athletics. No individual has equaled his influence in contributing to the standards of college competition.

LEADER IN SPORTS

Stagg has always insisted that victory at the price of unfair methods is not worth having; sports which do not contribute to character to have no justification. As a player, as a coach, as a member of the national football rules committee, of which he is a senior member, he has been a leader in the development of football.

Stagg has served the University of Chicago as athletic director and football coach since it first opened its doors in 1892 a record without parallel in the sport.

In those early days at Chicago, when they were just a handful of students, Stagg, like many other coaches of the times, played on his own teams because he did not have enough men to make up a squad.

BENCHED FOR PROFANITY

Graduated as a divinity student at Yale, Stagg always practiced what he preached. He was a stickler for discipline, never drank nor smoked and would not tolerate profanity. They recalled today that Stagg benched "Pa-Pa-Yard" McCarty, one of his stars of a few years ago, because he used profanity in one of the Maroon games.

Stagg was thrifty. He lived in a small apartment for years so he could save enough money to enable him to pay cash when he bought his home. They say he never borrowed a cent in his life.

When he attended Phillips-Exeter Academy in 1883 to prepare for Yale, his capital amounted to $21, and during three months of the winter his food, consisting of bread and milk and a portion of round steak weekly, cost him 16 cents a day.

BECAME SPEAKER

After spending a year in the Yale Divinity School, Stagg decided that he lacked a gift for public speaking, and, therefore, was not fitted for the ministry. In later years, by dint of persevering effort, he taught himself to speak in public and he became an exceptionally effective speaker.

Stagg in his 41 years of service to the University of Chicago placed the institution above personal success. He looked upon football as a means to an end, the well-rounded development of character and not merely an end in itself.

Conscience to him meant more than applause. He was handicapped for years by the lack of first class material for winning football teams and his prestige with the public undoubtedly suffered seriously.

But Stagg never lost a night's sleep over it, he never complained,

Fish and Game

—By WIN BROOKS

"Mark northeast!"
"Pull your head down, you dummy!"
Helen Maria, but it's cold!"

A spear-head of birds comes rushing in over the flats in gently wavering silhouette against the dawn sky. The hunters, hunched in their blinds, answer. The flight rushes down wind, banks sharply and veers to stool—big blacks, redlegs! Safeties click.

"Now!"

Two doubles roar bluie! bluie! and the automatic goes blam! blam! blam! and once more blam!

The flight veers—correct! The old leader reaches his long neck for heaven. The birds take the down wind on the top of the tower and are beyond gun range in three brief moments.

"Sweet Louise!" Pete observes.

"Well," says Mike, philosophically, "another season is opened in the same old manner. By closing day we'll be hittin' 'em, no doubt."

* * *

The doubles and the pumps and the automatics roar salute to the opening of the two-month wild fowl season on Monday morning. Today and tomorrow and Sunday the wives of duck hunters suffer terrific earaches and Monday night, if they have been lucky, the hunters themselves will be nursing sore shoulders.

It looks like a grand season with a lot of birds. Cold blustery weather has sent some duck flights along, and local breeders had a good summer. The geese have started South and the storms have broken up the coot rafts.

Duck hunting will be a cheap sport this fall compared with recent years. Guns, ammunition and decoys have all come down and the fellows who run the duck stands have reduced their prices.

A number of persons have asked me where they may get some good stand shooting within reasonable driving distance of Boston. There are any number of such places open to men who want one or two days shooting or a season's membership. A few are H. A. Fisher's stand at Marshfield; Fred B. Jones' on Canton reservoir; Thomas G. Stevenson's place at Centerville; J. W. Emery's at Marshfield Hills; C. S. Briggs' at Brewster; J Ruprecht's at Silver Lake in Kingston.

I make no personal recommendation of any particular one because I don't know the individual conditions. They are listed merely for the convenience of hunters and this column will list other such places called to its attention.

Anybody contemplating a trip to Vermont for partridge and woodcock will be well advised to postpone it until the latter part of the month according to R. W. (Dick) Marquardt who is back after four days of gunning his favorite covers. Too heavy foliage is the reason.

Effort to Form Coast Ice League Fails

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 14 (AP)—Guy Patrick, manager of the Vancouver entry in the Pacific Coast Hockey League last year, today said efforts to reorganize the circuit this year had failed.

Representatives of Seattle, Portland and Van couver, whose teams comprised the league membership, have decided it is impracticable to continue at this time, Patrick said, adding that efforts will be made to form a league next season.

Bat Nelson's Old Tip Gives Edge to DeGlane

JACK CONWAY'S famous magic coin was a bit dusty as a result of getting tossed around when Andy Callahan upset the dope and licked Lou Brouillard.

Yet it was called upon to name the winner of the title wrestling bout between Henri DeGlane and Al Morelli.

"Fermie Battling Nelson to do the picking," interrupted Conway. "Nelson never told me the old percentage is with the champion. So let DeGlane be the selection."

An adventurer if ever there was one, a story teller of story tellers and personality above par in the bargain, the "Headline Hunter" rebounds to radio network for NBC with ideas quite as different as his own style of delivery. He will relate not only his thrilling experiences, but include incidents in the lives of what he has chosen to call his "Adventurers Club." Membership therein is open to Mr and Mrs. Listening Public every where. All one needs to enroll is a true adventure unusual enough in the opinion of Mr. Gibbons to be featured during his time on the air from week to week. He will explain the details further at the aforementioned hour tonight.

Lanky Bill Munday the "Jawjaw" man of "mike" reknown last year and the year before, is apparently not through as an announcer of football, according to late advices in hand. In fact the southern sport scribe is due to describe that Notre Dame vs. Drake game tomorrow afternoon at South Bend, Indiana. Boston and New England are to hear him over WEEI-WBZA waves.

MARCH OF PROGRESS

Unique is the program coming through tonight (WNAC) over Yankee Network facilities, featuring Joe Rines and his Orchestra. Important events since 1914 are to be recalled and made the more vivid by rendition of music popular throughout the country during the years that followed from then until the present day. This offering is arranged to occupy 30 minutes (8:30 to 9 o'clock) of fast-moving melody and news review, sponsored by the Gilchrist company.

On the Air

So often does "Say It Isn't So," Irv Berlin's song, come out of the air that listers are singing back Don't "Say it isn't So" . . . The constant repetition of this song proves it's not like gold in the mouth—a flaw in the pan.

Speaking of Berlin reminds us that he hasn't play an instrument (he picks out notes with two fingers on a piano) and can't read music. Whereas his in-law, Clarence Mackay, plays several instruments with ability, and in private concerts has conducted symphony orchs. Yet Mackay made his millions in 'the telegram business with nary a dime earned in music while the musically illiterate Berlin made his pile in song.

And Berlin isn't the only famous musical man who knows nothing about the technical side of melody. It's absolutely true that half of the musicians playing in dance orchs. can't read a note of music . . . Bing Crosby and Kate Smith can't carry a tune . . . Maurice Chevalier and Ruth Etting never took a lesson . . . Jane Pickens plays the piano but can't accompany herself as she can't play in the key she sings . . . Incidentally, a tonsil operation changed Jane from a soprano to a contralto . . . And a similar operation did the same to Libby Holman.

Another freak is that there are only eight words for the last 42 notes of "Parade" . . . One song in about 25 years inspires for the composers . . . Art Sheet Singer Dorothy Dee Vocalist Bert . . . sang her above the original . . . Paul Whiteman's is about the toughest musical organization to join, especially as Bix men could play in ranking symphony orchs . . . Were the Guy Lombardo musikers split up they wouldn't rank near as high since it's their teamwork that's poured them to fame. . . . And a word for our locals—the orchs. of Jose Solomon, Jacques Renard and Law Conrad contain men with envious reputations in the national musical field.

GOOD REPORTS ARRIVE FROM MANY FIRMS

By B. C. FORBES

Pessimists frequently growl that this column too often prints favorable news. They urge the painting daily of harrowingly dark pictures and shouting prophecies of blood-curdling things to come.

The writer cannot fathom what helpful purpose would be served by wallowing constantly in despair, shrieking warnings of impending total collapse, ransacking the country for depressing news and counseling everybody to become panicky.

Perhaps mistakenly, the writer has reasoned that the people of this country have been served with adequate volume of pessimistic news and views, and that there was no overwhelming need for joining the calamity chorus.

GAINS CONTINUE

When everything was slumping around the middle of the year, the writer became convinced the slaughter was being carried absurdly far and that there was no profound reason for every thoughtful citizen doing anything and everything within his power to stem the debacle.

Events have justified such an attitude. During July and August a turn for the better was clearly discerned. Following the Maine election, a note of caution has been sounded here, especially regarding security quotations, because the writer knew that the financial power-that-be would retard the vigorous constructive efforts they had been putting forth theretofore.

Happily, although security and commodity prices have experienced a relapse, trade and industry and transportation have continued to move modestly in the right direction. This is compensation for the reaction in securities and commodities from their recovery peaks.

INCREASE IN BUILDING

Frankly, the writer has made a point in all his contacts to gather from first-hand sources favorable or half-way favorable facts and figures.

Perhaps it is because of the principle followed by this column that it has been attracting a mass of encouraging news items from many kinds of concerns in many parts of the country. The following are diversified samples:

Communications from New England record substantial quickening of activity, the first of any magnitude since 1929.

President A. E. Dickinson of Indiana Limestone states that approximately $1,150,000,000 has been spent for new construction in the last nine months of this year and that this construction industry, like other basic lines, seems to have passed the turning point."

The A. C. Spark Plug Company, President Harlow H. Curtice announces, is putting some 2000 men to work, due to automobile activities on 1933 models.

AIR TRAFFIC BOOMS

President Lamotte T. Cohu states that American Airways had an increase of almost 40 per cent in passenger business last month over a year ago, and that air express business increased fully 400 per cent. Orders, doubtless, urgent orders for replenishing various supplies.

Leading refrigeration manufacturers continue to send reports of sales gains.

New Orleans reports heavier tonnage carried by the Federal Barge lines.

President Joseph Wilshire of Stanford Brands:

"The demand for all our products has been stimulated."

Sales of Lincoln cars show "a sharp increase.

The Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles:

"Business activity is evidencing a degree of stability that has been absent for a considerable period of time."

The Vermont Marble Company is employing a night-loading shift to cope with increased shipments.

U. S. Rubber's sole and heel plant at Providence "is now operating at capacity with three eight-hour shifts."

Important utility companies report consistent gains in recent weeks.

The Seminole Paper Corporation has received from Kroger Stores "the largest order of its kind ever filed in the country." President Albert H. Morrill of Kroger declares "too much buying and too much selling have been done in dabs and dribbles."

TRUSTS PICKING UP SELECTED HOLDINGS

By FRANK H. MELOON

State Street circles hear some of the more important investment trusts have been picking up selected holdings, with buying centering in rails and industrials during the past few days. Selections are said to be designed for long-pull positions in the trusts portfolios. Stockholders in investment trusts have nearly doubled in number since the 1929 crash. Sales of shares have brought considerable new money into the treasuries of the better investment trusts, the managers of which are at least buying on a very much better basis than those who made their purchases when Wall Street had no bargain counter.

Charles H. Brown of Osterville, newest director of the New England Council is a past president of the Massachusetts Hotel Assn., chairman of the legislative committee of the association and president of the Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Hotel Assn. Mr. Brown is a familiar figure on Beacon Hill, having served for many years

Charles H. Brown in the legislature. He is a staunch supporter of the campaign to cut taxation and also of the one to increase New England's competitive position, which brings the Bay State great sums annually.

President Ross Beason of the Administrative & Research Corp. sees "steady, gradual market now only a matter of a few months. The time seems a bit indefinite, though certainly cheering Mr Beason finds the American public more "stock-minded" than ever before but the advice to get "nonchminded" still appears very good. Inasmuch as the senior equities of good corporations can hardly stay down in any real bull market while junior equities rise

Bradstreet's weekly review finds shoe and leather trade prospects good. It says:

"There is a steady raw material market. Retail shoe sale trade has improved. Factory wage scales are firm. Leather tanneries are operating on full schedules resulting from steady demand for leather. Prospects for another increase in prices on leather are probable. Shoe factories are continuing to operate on full-time schedules with plenty of fill-in-orders."

Bradstreet's finds a seasonal increase in demand for better grade jewelry, but said sales were less than a year ago, though collections were equal to those in 1931.

"The wool market," it says, "has entered into the fourth week of moderate activity. Sales are confined to small lots for fill-in requirements of mills. The limited turnover has not materially affected prices and there is an indication that wool values will recede to much lower levels."

Remington Rand's Plant on Full Time

Syracuse plant of Remington Typewriter Co. is operating full time with a normal force of 1100 workers according to executives of the plant. Full-time operations will continue until January, at least, it was stated. Shoe plant is running five and a half days a week.

Canadian Paint Prices Reduced

Montreal, Oct. 14—Sherwin Williams Co. of Canada and other Canadian paint manufacturers have further reduced prices by 40 cents a gallon for white paints and 30 cents a gallon for colors. Current prices are $3.05 a gallon for colors and $3.25 for white.

STATE ST. Hears:

That the base from which constructive operations could be undertaken is forming in an encouraging manner. In fact, it is so promising that a few careful commitments on the long side are being advised by some brokers. For the moment their buy suggestions are limited to low-priced specialties that have been well deflated in the fall from the September top. Of the major groups the rails, with additional good earlindings reports promised, should lead the way.

Advertising Weakness

Once again the early dealings found the list going the way in a manner that treated the impression lower prices were unavoidable. If ever an open invitation was extended to would-be bears it was given yesterday and today. But this in itself is suspicious and worthy of close analysis.

Generally speaking the list never advertises weakness unless sponsors see the situation is well in hand that they can afford to deliberately dig prices in order to encourage the short interest, whose covering subsequently strengthens the technical position.

Consider the way in which the list has worked lower. Leaders dipped on minimum volume, while the balances of the list either churned around or disappeared from the tape altogether. Only the lightest pressure seemed necessary to depress prices but once this lifted buoyancy seemed anxious to make an appearance.

Trading Favorites

Examination of the trading favorites of various brokers and commentators does not reveal any one group in particular. It does show that low priced issues in nearly every section are believed to hold promise in the event the anticipated rally materializes.

• • •

None of the above purchases entails a great period of waiting, in the event an upswing fails to develop. A further precaution the average trader should take is to protect himself by making certain that his account does not become too crowded. It is easier to average on a scale up than down.

Closing Is Steady in London Market

London, Oct. 14—Gold shares were in keen demand on the stock exchange today. Transatlantic issues recovered in the afternoon, but other issues were irregular. The closing was steady. Closing in Paris was mixed. Berlin bears finished fractionally lower.

Today's News of Live Stocks in Wall Street

TODAY'S turnabout caught Wall Street by surprise as sentiment went to a new low yesterday following the market's failure to carry through Tuesday's pre-holiday rise. The shorts were caught completely off guard, and their scramble to cover was largely responsible for some of the spectacular gains.

Commodities joined the upswing. Wheat rose around 2 cents a bushel and cotton around $1 a bale. Bonds staged a brisk rise under leadership of the railroad obligations.

American Telephone Is a Star Performer

American Telephone was a spectacular performer today, spurting under urgent short covering. The stock had been hammered by the bears in the last week, being driven under par for the first time in two months, on uncertainty over the 9 per cent dividend.

A. & P. Sales Set $63,625,099 Total

Sales of Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. for four weeks ended Oct. 1, were $63,625,099, compared with $74,076,848 for the same period in 1931, a decrease of $10,451,585, or 14.11 per cent.

September sales, in tons, were estimated as 391,804 this year, compared with 408,323 in September, 1931, a decrease in quantity of merchandise sold of 16,519 tons, or 4.05 per cent.

Average weekly sales in September were $15,906,274, compared with $18,519,170 in 1931. Average weekly tonnage sales were 97,951 compared with 102,081 in September, 1931.

American Chicle's Profit Is $1,393,638

All the company reports aren't gloomy. Today, for example, we have word that American Chicle has had profit of $1,393,638 in the first nine months against $1,636,923 profit in the like period of 1931.

Wheat Factor in Sears Roebuck

Widespread belief that the immediate trend of mail order shares will be governed largely by the trend of the wheat market was strengthened by failure of Sears, Roebuck stock to respond to the most encouraging report of sales published in some time. The gain for the period ended Oct. 8 over the immediately preceding four weeks was $3,200,000, the best since 1921, when the increase was $5,809,000. For the same time last year the gain in sales was $2,700,000 and in 1930 it amounted to $4,800,000. Contrasted with 12 months ago the Oct. 8 total was 10 per cent lower, whereas for the year to date the decline has been 20 per cent.

Petroleum Group Action Improves

Continuing their recently acquired reputation of moving against the trend, oil stocks have lately displayed signs of special demand. One factor in this connection is knowledge of the completion of extensive liquidation of petroleum shares by a well known brokerage firm. Another is the new pro-rata order of the Texas Railroad Commission, effective tomorrow, calling for a reduction in total allowable production in that state of 12½ per cent daily as of October 1. Further than this scattered advances in one or two fields has led to a belief that the threat of crude oil price cuts has been averted.

Warren Bros. Net Totals $200,041

Warren Brothers Co. reports for the eight months ended August 31, 1932, consolidated net profits of the company and its wholly-owned subsidiaries of $200,041 against $764,474 in the same period of 1931. The earnings for the eight months included interest accrued on Cuban notes but not paid because not due until the year 1933, and included also discount on the company's debentures purchased for retirement. A year ago the earnings of $764,474, in which earnings of Warren Brothers Financial Corporation appeared, included also $381,221 dividends from partially owned companies, whereas Warren Brothers' equity in the earnings of partially-owned companies was 287,384. The amount of unpaid Cuban note interest included in the earnings was $442,000.

Department Store Sales Are Better

New York, Oct. 14—Interstate Department Stores reports sales for the period, Oct. 1 to Oct. 8, inclusive, were 10.3 per cent ahead of the same period last year. Of the 34 stores in the chain, which operates in 14 states, 20 showed sales increases, two had sales equaling last year's figures and the remaining 12 showed only small declines.

Dividends

McIntyre Porcupine Mines, Ltd., today declared an extra dividend of 12½ cents and the regular quarterly of 25 cents, both payable Dec. 1 to stock of record Nov. 1. Three months ago a similar extra was paid.

Canadian Dollar Reaches New High

New York, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Canadian dollar reached a new high for the year here today, crossing 91 cents. Strength in New York followed an advance in London prior to the local opening. The pickabrad, bankers said, was probably due to a demand for the currency in payment for grain or Canadian securities.

9 Months' Travel by Air Lines Up

Chicago, Oct. 14—In September United Air Lines carried 10,850 passengers, against 11,888 in August and 5483 in September, 1931.

Passengers carried during the first nine months of 1932 totaled 69,958, against 36,805 in the same period last year.

BUSINESS

SPECTATOR Says:

Apparently nobody wanted stocks except a few shorts, and they put up a sorry exhibition. While there ought to be a better rally in the list than occurred on Tuesday, it would be just as well to stand aside until stocks show something. The $7,000,000 increase in brokers' loans is puzzling. It normally would represent distribution in a declining market, but indications are the public hasn't been doing anything for several weeks.

American Telephone

The American Telephone Business Index is understood to confirm the recent signs of improvement in industry. The index has been revised and the new figures show that business was 54 per cent below normal in July, 51.7 per cent in August and 48 per cent in September, with further gains expected this month.

The figures in the old index were 60.9 per cent, 58 and 54.5 per cent, respectively. The curious point of all this is that Telephone was revaled only by Allied Chemical as the weakest stock. The old dividend worry again.

Wheat and Cotton

It won't be long now before wheat and cotton reach levels where even they will stop declining.

The recent drop in commodities, however, is not an encouraging prospect from a speculative point of view. Indications pout to another substantial gain in tomorrow's car loadings report; which should be worth at least some rally in the rails. Carrier stocks, however, won't do much until their bonds show a decided reversal.

LIVELY RALLY IS STAGED BY LEADERS

New York, Oct. 14—The stock market in Wall St. today reversed the weakness of the last two weeks with a spectacular rally which carried leading issues up from 1 to 9 points.

Strength was general in security and commodity markets. Bonds were up sharply and curb stocks were strong. Wheat rose nearly 3 cents a bushel and cotton more than 50 cents a bale.

BEARS SEEK COVER

The heaviest buying seen in some time drove the shorts to cover and at one time the high speed ticker was 2 minutes behind.

Among the biggest gainers were American Telephone, U. S. Steel common and preferred, Union Pacific, Lackawanna, Atchison, Case Threshing, American Can, Consolidated Gas, Auburn and United Aircraft. The reversal in the market's trend was attributed to further gains reported by business this week.

The stock market rally brought a characteristically sudden shift of sentiment in Wall Street from deep gloom to bright sunshine.

Shorts found they had sold themselves into a trap and prices soared in principal issues as they rushed to cover. The market quieted down in the afternoon, but prices held near the top of the day's trading. Wheat advanced, but stocks started up first.

American Telephone, in which a large short interest was said in brokerage quarters to have been built up, shot forward 9 points to 124 points. Union Pacific gained as much, and Atchison and Case nearly about 6 and 7 points.

Miscellaneous issues up 6 or more at the same time included U. S. Steel common and preferred, New York Central, Southern Pacific, du-Pont, Consolidated Gas, Public Service of N. J., Western Union, American Tobacco B, International Harvester, Johns Manville, American Can, Eastman and Westinghouse.

LIQUIDATION CEASES

The suprisoing upswing appeared to reflect a complete cessation of the recent liquidation, indicating that weakly held stock which had been hanging over the market had been cleared up. While the advance was felt in brokerage circles to have been largely at the expense of shorts, some quarters reported good buying, both from foreign and domestic sources.

Business and corporate news was not particularly important, although the weekly mercantile review said that retail trade was holding up well, and in some quarters running ahead of a year ago.

While Wall Street has been in a quandry as to whether the recent improvement in business merely reflected seasonal buying, public bullish quarters expressed enthusiasm over the fact that the percentage gain in the movement of stocks appears to have exceeded the usual seasonal upswing.

Extreme pessimism of short term credit in this market; although little attention was paid to it yesterday, also came in for attention in bullish quarters today. Call money again renewed at one per cent.

There has been much argument in Wall st. as to whether cheap money starts business recovery, or whether it merely reflects a lack of demand for credit, owing to the small volume of commerce. The argument revolves around which is the cart, and which is the horse, but most banking quarters acknowledge that cheap credit, if any conditions being favorable, should facilitate business pickup. The fact that the Federal Reserve made no change in its rediscount rate of 2½ per cent yesterday was a surprise to some, there was considerable gossip over the probability of a reduction later.

Johns-Manville Deficit 55c Share

Johns-Manville Corporation and subsidiary companies for the quarter ended September 30 last, yesterday reported a net loss after income tax accrual, depreciation and depletion of $277,696, against net profit after similiar deductions of $261,406, equal to 17 cents per share on common stock in the 1931 third quarter. The 1932 third quarter deficit equalled 55 cents a common share.

For the first nine months of the year, net loss totaled $1,792,571, against net profit of $1,207,174, equal to $1.08 a share on common stock in the first nine months of 1931. The 1932 nine months' deficit equalled $2.92 a common share.

Bond Offerings in Week Are Smaller

New bond offerings placed in this market in the past week totaled $1,190,000 compared with $65,462,000 in the preceding week. No new issues were marketed in the corresponding week last year.

Int. Silver Busy With Rush Orders

International Silver Co. plant at Wallingford, Ct., will run under 13-hour daily schedule until January 2 because of large number of rush orders.

Home Savings Pays a Regular Rate

Home Savings Bank declared semi-annual dividend on deposits of 2 per cent, payable October 19. This is the same rate as paid six months ago.

Dividend Is Deferred

Brazilian Traction Light & Power Co. has decided "in view of conditions existing in Brazil" to defer action on the common dividend until next January.

BE A LIVE WIRE! JOIN OUR POSTCARD EXCHANGE!

How would you like to rush to the door, when the postman rings, and get a snappy postcard, like the above, from an attractive member of our Postcard Exchange Club? Oh, very well, if you feel that way about it. But you'll be sorry some day. When you are old, and grouchy and friendless, do not come around and ask to pore over OUR album. Remember you had your chance. We asked a civil question, and you didn't even give us a civil answer. So far as the Exchange Club is concerned, you do not exist from now on. You simply do not belong. You are just a ship without a rudder. Skiddoo, twenty-three.

KRAZY KAT

One of the Finest

Books and Characters
—By LINCOLN KERSTEIN—

Most of the men and women who achieve an outstanding fame throughout the country by virtue of their accomplishment in various fields of action are no writers, and they modestly enough admit the fact. When the Saturday Evening Post, or a newspaper syndicate wants the life of a great aviator, a prominent racing driver, a famous jockey, like as not the story is written for them by Lincoln Kirstein, ghost-writer," who, though he is often competent enough to string the facts of his subject's adventures together to make into consecutive chapters, somehow is Not of the actual kick of the incident inside out in making it orderly and grammatical. Notable exceptions to the synthetic autobiography were Charles Lindbergh's WE and Amelia Earhart's FOR THE FUN OF IT. But neither of these documents, although the events related within them were as exciting or even more exciting than Gene Tunney's, have his authority, conviction or reality.

Gene Tunney wrote all of A MAN MUST FIGHT by himself. Houghton, Mifflin, his publishers, swear to it. There's no particular reason why a prize-fighter couldn't write about himself, and Mr. Tunney is famous for being more than literate.

A MAN MUST FIGHT is a very honest and interesting book about the making of a prizefighter, who from almost the beginning of his career wanted to be the world's heavyweight champion, who through a series of difficulties gained that ambition and then retired from the game. Mr. Tunney ends his book with his exit from the game. His famous lecture to Yale students on what a boxer thought of Shakespeare—his friendship with George Bernard Shaw, who in his youth wrote a blank verse drama about Lahel Byron, a boxer not unlike Tunney—his subsequent marriage and travels, have no place in the record of his fighting, and are left with dignity completely omitted. Tunney has known not only the adversity of defeat, but what is even harder to bear, the unpopularity of success. His simple efforts to educate himself have not been particularly popular with that element of the ringside who believe all good boxers are morons and that a taste for books is female. If any of these gentlemen happen to read A MAN MUST FIGHT they may be surprised at Tunney's frank consciousness of their dislike, and his lack of embarrassment at their contempt. They may even read far enough to be absorbed in his writing, for he can write extremely well about what he knows best—boxing.

Defensive Writing

Tunney wrote this book, he says, to protect his record from inaccuracy. There are many "official" lives of him serialized in his career, all of which were so false as to be fantastic. Actually, Tunney started writing with a pair of boxing gloves his father, an old admirer of Corbett's, had given him, gave him on his tenth birthday.

His first punching bag was an inflated turkey gobbler's crop. His early training consisted of occasional fist fights, swimming in the Hudson river, playing basket ball and foot ball. It was in the days before guns were recouned to as weapons of settlement, and personal combats, as he describes would last for days,—breaking out as soon as one boy caught sight of his rival, until one was too tired to continue.

Tunney, while working as a shipping clerk in the day time, worked his way up at night, his training with various minor celebrities of the lower New York athletic clubs. After a while, he was in demand for exhibition matches at stag smokers where he was mightily rewarded with a glass of ginger ale and a ham sandwich. Tunney regrets the disappearance of those days.

"These smokers which used to be so popular among the young men of New York fifteen or twenty years ago have unfortunately become things of the past. They were healthy and happy foregatherings of working young men and made an evening of fine amusement and entertainment. There was invariably beer, with soft drinks and sandwiches. Drunkenness was taboo. It was all clean, vigorous diversion, free from annt."

Just before the entrance of the United States into the war, Tunney received an injury playing basket ball, which, although it did not wholly re-injured might have seriously hindered the whole course of his career, including his eyesight. The injury, told without any self-pity one can get an extremely clear idea of how much courage there was in being a successful boxer outside of the hazard of the ring itself. Finally, with a certain irony, Tunney was put in touch with a German doctor who fixed him up enough to enlist in the marines. By 1.9 Tunney had made himself the champion boxer of the American Expeditionary Forces in France. In America the sports writers were heralding the arrival of a talented young man called Dempsey, whose name was beginning to be coupled with Jess Willard's. Tunney heard of him, and from then on, considered the possibility of beating him.

Long, Hard Road

The story of his progress up to the first Dempsey fight is better read in the book itself. There were many fights, and three whole years spent in building up his body at a New Jersey farm. Tunney successfully beat Harry Greb, Georges Carpentier, Tommy Gibbons, and many others. But it was always Dempsey he was after, and his chief study was of the styles of these men who'd met Dempsey.

Tunney rather disbelieves in the distinction between a "natural" and a "made" fighter.

"To me it has always been a difference in styles. One man finds out, not necessarily consciously, that an aggressive swinging attack, without much regard for defense, is the most effective style. Others learn that natural ingenuity, chance, the greatest barroom fighter, who, I assume, can be termed a natural fighter could not possibly cope successfully with the poorest fourth-rate professional."

Tunney's style was a combination of the two styles, but by the description of his preparation for the Dempsey match, he has improved himself the completely conscious watchful, almost intellectual fighter.

One would think that the worst job a boxer would have to face would be a heavy opponent with hard muscles and lightening gloves.

But such is by no means the case. The disgusting behaviour of fight managers and promoters, the carnivorous lawyers and powerful crooks willing around the ring like buzzards around a battlefield is enough to sicken anybody who cares for boxing as boxing. Tunney shows how a boxer must fight three opponents at once—his partner of the ring, his own refractory nerves and the carnival of the contractors. Tunney gives a very vivid picture of the mental agony, a torment that would make any rabbit-punching which can attend the preparations for a championship fight. The hedged about with threat of law suits, rumors of fight fixing, bribes and double crossing. In the case of Tunney's fight, all proceeds down $123,000 to be declared winner. When one thinks of the fate of most ex-champions, the general color of the boxing game, the prize ring, and the difficulty of a comeback, one realizes how distressing a temptation this must have been on the eve of the greatest crisis of a sportsman's life.

Tunney speaks of himself little. He goes into a detailed description of the famous long-count decision in his second encounter with Dempsey. It was the first time in his career he had ever been knocked down, beaten, yes, but never crumpled to the canvas. His telling of those nine seconds is human and compelling.

"My first conscious reaction was one of comfort. Gosh, the added floor time I'm getting! Realizing, as do all professional boxers, that the first nine seconds of a knockdown belong to the referee, not to the floor, I never had any thought of getting up before the referee said 'Nine!' Only badly dazed boxers who have momentarily lost consciousness and 'show-off' fail to take the nine seconds that are theirs. To boxers that I have ever known has carried a stop-watch on his wrist going into the ring. Boxers always go by the referee's timing. Within or twenty-nine seconds or nine seconds had elapsed when the referee said 'NINE' would have made no difference to me. My signal to get off the floor was the count—Nine! The action of the referee is not taking up the count immediately when I went on the floor, regardless of where Dempsey was, is another question."

Story Breeds Admiration

When you have finished the book he cannot help having a great deal of admiration and respect for Gene Tunney. His frankness in speaking of the reasons for his unpopularity, his candid recounting of the conditions that forced him to make up mind for a few days—"as though hot water had been poured through a hole in my skull and flowed down over the brain to my eyes, leaving a hot film")—and the mov-ing account of his going to call on the man he'd defeated the day before in a Philadelphia hotel, testify to a man who has tried to be as honest with himself in his writing as he was hard in his punching. The book is full of touches of solid, fast and gracious story. If he writes again, which is to be sincerely hoped, he could do well to be less careful to spare the feelings of many of his past adversaries, who would receive his every jibe like courtesy, and he could serve a valuable function in cleaning up the boxing game. There are few who have had such a talent and such a passion.

GERMANY BALKS ARMS PARLEY

London, Oct. 14 (AP)—Great Britain and France have agreed to hold a four-power emergency disarmament conference at Geneva, it was announced today at the conclusion of "a conference between Prime Minister MacDonald and Premier Herriot.

Italy already has accepted an investigation to participate, but this far Germany has not agreed to holding the conference.

Germany's attitude indicates another deadlock, but her objections were described at No. 10 Downing st. as "temporary."

This special conferences would deal with Germany's demand for arms equality and would attempt to get her back into the world disarmament conference from which she retired when the other powers declined to concede her equality claim.

The American Druggist

A Good and Useful Neighbor

The celebration of "Pharmacy Week," between October 10 and 15, is important to all who value their own health and that of their families.

The "pharmacy," ordinarily called a drug store, is an institution of prime importance to national and individual welfare. In that institution man has made himself master of the science of pharmacy, which is the science of supplying drugs, that is to say, chemical substances, apart from foods, for the cure and prevention of disease. The pharmacist is the scientific distributing agent in the battle of mankind against its enemies, from disease-breeding microscopic bacteria up to the dangerous higher forms of life.

FROM SUPERSTITION TO SCIENCE

Ancient magicians pretended to practice the science of pharmacy, of which they were necessarily ignorant. "Doctors" in the primitive days of superstition, with their love philtres and much nonsense about grinding up pearls and other precious stones, loathsome insects and reptiles of curative purposes, ruled the world of medicine for centuries.

AMAZING PROGRESS

During the past century, and even more amazingly in this twentieth century, the science of the pharmacist has made tremendous strides. One hundred years ago a few inorganic salts and vegetable extracts of doubtful value constituted the whole stock in trade even of the comparatively "scientific pharmacist" of that date.

Within the last thirty years the science of pharmacy, represented on the shelves of thousands of drug stores today, has made extraordinary progress, immensely valuable and important to the race as a whole, and to every family and every individual in every country.

GUESSES COME TRUE

Curiously enough, crude experiments and guesses of ancient pharmacists, and old school doctors of fifty and seventy-five years ago, are now part of the highest form of the science of pharmacy.

Extracts of endocrine and other glands that control bodily functions are used today as a matter of course. The suggestion that they be used, offered by Dr. Braun-Seguard in the last century, was ridiculed.

The German scientist, Ehrlich, starting with the knowledge that organic arsenic compounds destroyed certain organisms, discovered and applied his remedy, salvarsan, commonly called "606," and successfully used now in one of the worst blood diseases, as quinine has been ever since its discovery, in the fight against malaria.

IMPORTANCE OF THE "DRUGGIST"

An educated man, with the lights of different colors in his store windows, to indicate his scientific profession, the corner store druggist is a public servant of highest value. Before he can receive his degree as a pharmacist he must go through years of hard study. He must be familiar with the thousands of drugs, remedies of all kinds with which his shelves are filled.

He must read correctly, and prepare with minute exactness, to the fraction of a grain, the prescriptions that the doctor entrusts to him, and that are often hurriedly scrawled in the sick room. It used to be the fashion, in England, to make prescriptions as illegible as possible.

Many look upon the drug store merely as an institution for supplying soda water and assorted "sundaes." That branch of the drug store business, unfortunately necessary that the pharmacists may make a living and pay heavy rents demanded for conspicuous stores, is the unimportant part of the drug store business.

AT THE BACK OF THE STORE

That which is important, and calls for public recognition and gratitude, is the work done through long hours by the trained man "at the back of the store," on whose accuracy may depend the life as well as the health of his neighbors.

Pharmacy Week, from October 10 to 15, is important to everybody in America.

Beer Next April

Maybe

American firms are placing orders in Bavaria for beer for delivery here next Spring, say dispatches from Berlin. Tentative orders for beer and wine, when the Volstead Act is changed, have been reported before from Europe, but these are said to be the first with a definite date set for delivery.

Most of these beer orders are to be filled late next Spring, the American consignees gambling on the probability that the act will be modified at the next session. A Uniontown, Pa., man is so sure of it that he has demanded delivery of fifty barrels of dark Hofbrau on April 15.

Perhaps these gentlemen are a little hasty in sending in their orders with no postponement provisions. Congress moves slowly its wonders to perform, even when it has a majority in favor of some specific measure. But the news from Berlin is, nevertheless, encouraging.

When men put up real money they usually have a reason for it.

Names Up-to-Date

Russian babies are in a great predicament, says Dr. Stanley High. They are given names like "Electrification," "Five-Day Week," "Five-Year Plan" and "Proletariat."

It is to be hoped the names sound better in Russian than they do in English. Even if they sound worse, the infants will probably survive, even the one saddled with "Dneiprostroy," for human beings can stand anything, almost.

The worst they will do is make Russian novels harder reading than they are now, even with plain Boris, Alexis or Mike to keep track of.

It is an old custom to name children according to the serious ideas of the age.

Once Americans took the Bible seriously enough to name their children from it. In the Massachusetts Legislature a century ago the roster included Praise-God Hussey, Deliverance Rogers and True Belief White.

This is not considered chic any more. If anything is taken seriously enough amongst us to be a source of nomenclature, it must be the movies. The cradles are filled with young Glorias, Gretas and Marlenes. So it would be difficult to call the Russians frivolous.

Palace of the Doges

VENICE, Oct. 14.—I feel about a Doge a good deal like the British in Philadelphia who inquired: "What is a Biddle?" My dictionary tells me a Doge was the chief magistrate of Venice before dogeing went out, in the 1779 election. But their palace remains to charm.

Great painters have described Venice as pink, likely because the palace of the doges is of that dominating tint. Some architects have classed it as the most beautiful edifice in the world. Maybe it is. I haven't come all the way to Venice to argue and get behind in my gondolaing.

Its pink is fringed with arcadzle of skyey-white stone, and duked up with innumerable balconies. One thing is certain, it hasn't the morbid nuance of the majority of Venetian architecture. In the tremulous sun, it looks as though a puff of wind might send it floating away.

Carved figures on columns of the palace arcade are something of an encyclopedia in stone. Venetian love of symbols finds extravagant outlet. One was a ringer of Ed Wynn. Another suggested Fannie Hurst leaning out a window. Most famous in the galaxy was the Adam and Eve carving.

Tickets inside are free only Sundays and holidays. Here are vast art treasures, including the celebrated—just a second!—"Bacchus and Ariadne" by Tintoretto. A tide-race of tourists poured in, but I got all diverted watching a gamin plugging a napping bald-head with a pea shooter. He was dead shot.

* * *

Venice bristles with war talk against her ancient enemy, France. Italy's home is in Mussolini, whose supremacy is complete. A prevalent story of his domination concerns the Duce stopping to pick up the King's ketchel at a function. "Let me do that," said the King. "It's the only thing left into which I can stick my nose."

* * *

I've been liching to inquire about those slanting beams over canals, so reminiful in the gondolier poles and as backhomey as pennyroyal and hoarhound. Today I heard an innocent inquire of her guide: "What are those things like American barber poles?" Without telling her, he replied: "Everybody from the States asks that." So I decided to keep my trap closed, but I'd still like to know.

* * *

I had a notion it was James Gordon Bennett's original idea in putting two brawny hammer swingers, stripped to waist, on the coping of the old Herald building to strike the time. But, in Venice, one finds the original on one side of the San Marco plaza.

* * *

Another myth is about the fabled beauty of the canal waters. I expected the glimmer of a birch forest. Instead, in daylight, they are unromantically scummy, often floating with melon rinds and other riffraff in the Coney Island manner. But waters change frequently, lessening dangers of pestilence. Their lure is in moonlight where magically and in dimpling swirls they impart a breath-taking sheen. It must be where the blue begins!

* * *

It's great fun watching gondoliers rage for the right-of-way, especially in blind corners of canals. I'm told, they rarely strike blows but they put on amusing shows of temperament. Choice epithets are "Figure of a pig!" and "Son of an ugly dog." They dance nimbly back and forth on their gondolas, spurting sprays of volubility and beating the air with sturdy arms. Then, all of a sudden, they glide away, forgetting the tempest in mutual bursts of song.

* * *

Of all nights I've seen, this is the most stupendous. Out a balcony window, skies are a layer cake of dull purple, yellow, a streak of rose, caught frame-like in a crumble of marigold. Overhead, a scatter of stars in silvery radiance. It's goofy, but I itch to roll up my pantaloons and go wading.

Just Folks

Thwarted

His mother saw a pulpit in some old cathedral dim
And all the Sunday worshipers being won to truth by him,
But though he longed to please her preacher man he couldn't be
For there was that within him which kept whispering of the sea.

His father thought a lawyer in good time he ought to make.
In dreams he saw him pleading for some human life at stake.
But courtrooms never called him. Still indifferent was he
To all save ships and sailor men and stories of the sea.

He never graced the pulpit; never rose to be a judge.
He lived and slaved for 60 years an ordinary drudge,
And all his years were dreary, since they never set him free
To follow far his fancy and go sailing out to sea.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

The Working Wife

DOES A WORKING WIFE spoil a husband?

Does the bride who keeps her job after marriage doom her own happiness?

Will the proud bridegroom, who protested against her "lifting a finger" during the honeymoon, soon expect her to provide most of the bacon, if she continues to punch the time clock?

These are questions which are agitating many a new home. Here's one worried mother's picture of the problem:

Elsie Robinson

Dear Miss Robinson:

I wonder what you think of this working wife business? Of course, I know that many wives must work; that the family can't eat unless they do. But I am not thinking of such cases. I'm thinking of young couples who could manage on one salary if they wished, and of the effect which the wife's pay envelope is having on the young husband.

To be frank, I have this situation in my own family, with my son of 24 and my daughter of 22. They are both fine young people. The girl has worked for three years, the boy for five. Two years ago they both married at a double wedding.

They married young people as fine as themselves. My son's bride was a young college girl who had made a position for herself in a bookshop. My daughter's husband was a young broker. My daughter had been private secretary to one of the head men in his firm.

When they first became engaged I naturally expected that the two young men would object to the idea of their brides working. To my surprise, nothing of the sort happened. In fact, they laughed at what they called my "old-fashioned ideas" on the subject. My daughter said:

"Why, mother, nobody feels like that any more! Modern wives expect to work. In fact, I know a lot of fellows who deliberately postpone marriage until they both have secured good jobs. What's wrong with that? We can't live the way we want to unless we both work, and, at any rate, no girl wants to lie around in an apartment all day."

But two years' time has certainly brought a great change. My son-in-law's work has failed steadily. At first, this seemed to worry him. He told me how terrible he felt because Evelyn was carrying the biggest part of the burden. But lately he acts quite reconciled. In fact, he seems to take it as a matter of course that she should pay the bills, and doesn't exert himself to find new work.

Evelyn, at first, was quite willing to practice what she had preached. Now, however, she is growing more bitter each day and I dread what lies ahead for them.

Nor is my own son acting any better. His work has been affected, also, and I am ashamed to say that he is displaying the same attitude as my son-in-law, and with the same result.

Miss Robinson, what is happening to our young men? Have men always been as selfish as this at heart? Or have these modern working girls destroyed masculine pride? I think my dead husband would rather have gone to jail than accept money from me when we were first married. Yet most of the boys I know not only accept their wives' money but, very shortly after marriage, begin to feel aggrieved if they don't get it.

Is my experience peculiar? Is this thing happening everywhere? And if so, what is there to be done about it?

"A WORRIED MOTHER."

So there it is. What's YOUR experience? What's YOUR answer?

'Prosperity Around the Corner' Again

—By Claude G. Bowers—

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic, "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

THE REPUBLICAN National Committee and Mr. Hoover are so moved by the fact that former Senator James A. Reed is to answer the Des Moines speech, which brought a drop in the market here and a renewed attack on the dollar in Europe, that a statement is issued. Their emotions are aroused because Mr. Reed differed from Woodrow Wilson on certain policies; and the Republican National Committee will not stand for any slight on Wilson.

Mr. Hoover, who still would have his residence in London but for Wilson, is finally reminded of his benefactor. We recall listening with amazement to a Hoover radio speech from the White House in which the President called the roll of Presidents who, in that mansion, had fought for peace. He began with Hayes and went down the list to Coolidge, and the one man he forgot was Wilson! I thought it a sourvy thing at the time, and now Mr. Hoover is up in arms because of the slight to Wilson!

There is just one other man this group has more ferociously assailed—and by whispers—and that is Al Smith, and just now this group and Mr. Hoover, who gave consent to the scurrilous campaign against Smith four years ago, are moved in indignation because of some imaginary slight to the man they maligned. It must be a desperate situation when these men, including Mr. Hoover, are constrained to pose as champions of Wilson and Smith.

* * *

The Miracle of "Recovery"

Mr. Hoover has finally determined what the issue of the campaign is. It is not prohibition, he says; it is not his subservience to the power trust; it is not the tariff which has destroyed our foreign trade and turned almost three million factory workers into the street; it is not his market-minded statesmanship and his callous indifference to the plight of thirty million farmers and thirty million others involved in the tragedy of unemployment. The public will please take notice that Mr. Hoover brushes these aside as inconsequential.

These minor matters he will ignore to stress the miracle he has wrought. No, this miracle is not the "elimination of poverty" he promised; it is not the miracle of putting "business on the basis of permanent prosperity" he claimed to have performed; it is the miracle of "recovery" he has accomplished.

The farmer still failing by the tens of thousands before mortgage foreclosures, and receiving less for his product than it costs to produce it, has not "recovered." The 11,000,000 workers denied their inalienable right to work have not recovered their jobs; and all welfare organizations warn that we are entering the blackest of the three Bostro Winters of human misery. These are not in on the recovery. And who has recovered is not at all clear; and lest the average man raise his eyebrows in amazement at the announcement that Mr. Hoover has brought about "recovery," we are told that this recovery, while very real indeed, is way down deep and not to be seen on the surface or by hungry eyes.

* * *

Hoover's Stupid Economic Policy

There is no recovery of the once busy scenes in New York Harbor—for foreign trade has been killed by Hoover's stupid economic policy; and no recovery in industry, since 11,000,000 jobless man still walk the streets.

You, and each of you, reading this announcement of "recovery," will determine for yourselves whether there has been any "recovery" for you.

Mr. Hoover still speaks as a market-minded statesman more interested in the ticker-tape than in the lengthening breadlines of the hungry. He is an incorrigible reactionary, with a Bourbon lack of vision, and incapacity to learn by experience. And that is the reason real Progressives in the Republican party are flocking by the thousands every day into the Roosevelt camp.

William Draper Lewis was a Theodore Roosevelt progressive in 1912. He was chairman of the platform committee in the Roosevelt convention that year. Later he became the biographer of Theodore Roosevelt. And he has just announced that he is leaving Mr. Hoover, because he is a reactionary and utterly off on economic issues, and is supporting Franklin D. Roosevelt, because he is a progressive.

Naturally, as a man of intellectual honesty and courage, he cannot support Mr. Hoover, since he concludes that the Grundy tariff monstrosity "rates are an important factor in the depression," and that their adjustment downward is essential to the revival of our export trade.

* * *

A Perfect Portrait of Mr. Hoover

Mr. Lewis stands where every sincere Progressive of 1912 must stand, with Franklin Roosevelt's program on public utilities. And so he says:

"By his speeches Mr. Roosevelt has shown himself to the public for what the history of his public acts show him to be, a broad-minded Progressive. His position on important public questions and his acts as an executive are influenced by a knowledge and sympathy with all classes and economic groups."

And then he adds something that is aimed directly at Mr. Hoover, and at the Mellon regime of the last twelve years. He says:

"For many years this country has been governed by persons whose outlook is to a great extent limited by the reaction and points of view of persons dealing in money or operating large enterprises."

Here in a few lines we have a perfect portrait of the public character of Mr. Hoover.

* * *

Continues His Policy of Indifference

And this robust Theodore Roosevelt progressive leaves no doubt as to whose portrait he has painted when he says that the overemphasis has been put on the wishes of the financial oligarchs, and adds:

"How else can one account for Mr. Hoover's delusion month after month that prosperity is just around the corner. How else can we account for his insistence a year ago that it was unnecessary for the Federal Government to join with the States to help those who are about to starve."

And now Mr. Lewis is about to tell us that prosperity is just around the corner again, while he continues his policy of indifference to 11,000,000 jobless men by refusing to avail himself of the opportunity to serve them placed in his hands by the Wagner bill, which was literally forced upon him.

* * *

Roosevelt's Speeches Are Progressive

Now Lewis speaks as a progressive; and Prof. Frank W. Taussig, the noted political economist of Harvard, announces his adherence to the Roosevelt cause because of his knowledge as an economist and his belief in sane progressivism. Amidst the leers and grins of disinterested and sincere "economists" as Ogden Mills, Mr. Hoover, Senator Moses and Jim Watson, not to drag in Doak and Hurley, jeers at Roosevelt's speeches, Prof. Taussig, who as an economist knows above them as a mountain above a sand grain at its base, says this:

"These speeches are progressive and at the same time candid and careful."

Thus the revolt against the inept and destructive leadership of Mr. Hoover comes not merely from the ruined farms, and the millions dispossessed of jobs, but from great economists who know their business and from all real progressives who know a reactionary subservient to money when they meet him on the street—or in the White House.
